GI Is Shot in B By Russian Soldier; Others Prevent Aid

Vienna Incident Called Deliberate By United States Provost Marshal

Vienna, March 8 (U.P.).—An American soldier who refused a Russian guard's order to walk in the gutter was shot in the back and wounded seriously early today in the most violent anti-American action yet perpetrated by the Soviets in Vienna, the United States Provost Marshall's office reported.

The soldier was left lying on a sidewalk for 45 minutes without being given any first aid, the Army said. His Austrian girl companion was taken into custody by 40 Russian soldiers carrying fixed bayonets when she ran for help, it was reported.

Two other American soldiers and two Austrian girls allegedly were fired on when they fled to summon American Army police. The Russians refused to permit an international patrol to intervene.

Soldier's Condition "Fair"

Col. Bernard Hurtless, Provost Marshal, identified the soldier as Pfc. Jack Grunden, 18, Portland, Oreg. He said Gruunden had been serving with a military police battalion in Vienna.

Sixth Army hospital authorities described Grunden's condition as "fair and improving." It had been feared that Grunden's shattered left arm would have to be amputated, but officials said the immediate need for such an operation was past.

An official Army spokesman said no protest had been forwarded yet to the Soviet command, but that the case was under investigation.

"I have no doubt a strong protest will be made, possibly from an even higher level than here," the spokesman said.

Little Information Here

The Department of the Army said in Washington that it had little information besides press reports on the incident and had asked Lieut. Gen. Geoffrey Keyes, American commander in Austria, for full details. Until then, no action will be taken or formal comment made, it was said.

It was indicated, however, that the Army probably would let General Keyes handle the matter. One official described Keyes as a "fair-minded man with discretion who can't be kicked around," and therefore better able to deal with it.

In the absence of an official report giving the full facts, top officials apparently were not greatly excited about the situation.—Editor's Note).

Harless described the incident as the most violent and boldest yet perpetrated against American military personnel by the Russians.

The incident was "deliberately provoked by the Russians," he charged.

7 Area Dairies, Co-op Indicted For Price, Trade Conspiracy

By Murrey Marder
Post Reporter

Seven concerns which distribute 86 per cent of this area's milk, and the dairy farmers' association which supplies the bulk of that milk, were indicted here yesterday for conspiracy to violate the Sherman Antitrust Act.

One individual, Bruce B. Derrick, secretary treasurer of the powerful Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, which has offices here, was also named in the broad-scale indictment returned by a special grand jury.

Charging that a conspiracy has existed here since 1930 to fix prices and restrain trade in what is now a 35 million dollar milk industry, the Federal jury named these corporative defendants:

The Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, in existence in various forms since 1908, and which is the dairy farmers' marketing agent for 80 per cent of this area's milk.

Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy Co., a subsidiary of National Dairy Products Corp., and Washington's largest dairy, supplying 47 per cent of this area's milk.

Thompson's Dairy, Inc., which sells about 13 per cent of metropolitan Washington's milk.

Safeway Stores, Inc., which operates a dairy through a division known as the Lucerne Milk Co., selling 11.1 per cent of the milk consumed here.

Alexandria Dairy Products Co., Inc., which operates in Alexandria, Arlington County and Falls Church, distributing 6.4 per cent of metropolitan Washington's milk.

Harvey Dairy, Inc., which does most of its business in and around Hyattsville, Md., selling 3.7 per cent of the area's milk.

Simpson Bros., Inc., doing business under the name of Wakefield Dairy, handling 2.9 per cent of the area's milk.

Richfield Dairy Corp., which sells about 1.5 per cent of all milk consumed here.

Under the Sherman Antitrust Act, conviction of a corporation carries a maximum fine of $5000 while the maximum penalty for an individual is a $5000 fine, or one year in jail, or both.

Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase and Safeway Stores promptly denied the charges against them, declaring they have never stepped outside the law in regard to milk prices. Officials of other dairies involved withheld comment pending study of the indictment.

Only three major area dairies were not named in the indictment. They are Embassy Dairy, whose owner, James J. Ward, has been the chief opponent of the Mary-

President Will Run; MacArthur Willing To Accept Nomination

General Says He's Available If Called by 'American People'

Tokyo, (Tuesday) March 9 (AP).—General MacArthur said today he would accept the presidency "if called by the American people," but would not actively seek it.

In a special statement commenting upon Wisconsin petitions filed in his behalf, the supreme commander for the Allied powers said:

"While it seems unnecessary for me to repeat that I do not actively seek or covet any office and have no plans for leaving my post in Japan I san say, and with due humility, that I would be recreant to all my concepts of good citizenship were I to shrink because of the hazards and responsibilities involved from accepting any public duty to which I might be called by the American people."

The general said he was "deeply grateful" for the "spontaneous displayy of friendly confidence" by those who filed his name in the Wisconsin primary next April 6.

In addition to the Wisconsin move in his behalf, Hearst newspapers have begun a "MacArthur for America" boom, seeking his nomination as Republican candidatee for the presidency.

Gov. Dewey, Stassen Face 1st Test Today

Concord, N. H., March 8 (AP).—The first official show-down in the 1948 Republican presidential race comes tomorrow in the New Hampshire primary.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York and Harold E. Stassen are laying heavy stakes on the line—aiming at giving their respective candidacy a psychological boost even though only eight delegates are involved.

Just what affect this primary will have on the rest of the Nation is debatable, but campaign managers for both Dewey and Stassen have made clear they intend to herald any decisive victory for their man as an indication of a national trend.

On the eve of the voting, Dewey's forces are outwardly jubilant—claiming a victory for seven of their eight-delegate slate.

The Stassen camp publicly predicts the former Minnesota Governor will win five of the eight delegates. Privately, however, they say they'll be satisfied if they win three.

Upward of 55,000 ballots—a record here for a presidential primary—are expected to be cast. Clear weather is forecast.

The Dewey-Stassen test of strength has provided the spark for this primary—the first in the Nation—as they are the only Republican presidential condidates to enter slates.

Truman Defies Southern Revolt As He Reaffirms Civil Rights Stand

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

President Truman announced formally late yesterday that he was a candidate for a full, four-year term in the White House.

In throwing his hat in the ring, Mr. Truman defied Southern politicians with a "no retreat" stand on his civil rights program aimed at Jim Crowism.

The announcement of Mr. Truman's candidacy, which was surprising only in its timing, was made in the White House lobby by Senator J. Howard McGrath of Rhode Island, chairman of the Democratic National Committee. He and Gael Sullivan, executive director of the committee, had just talked to the Chief Executive for an hour and a half.

Conferred on Civil Rights

"The President has authorized me to say," McGrath told reporters, "that if nominated by the Democratic National Convention, he will accept and run.

"I talked to the President with respect to his civil rights message. The President's position remains unchanged since he delivered his message.

"I might state that it is my view, which I expressed to the President, that the substance of his message is as old as the United States Constitution and as new as the 1944 Democratic national platform."

The McGrath statement came at a time when the Democratic picture was dismal in the extreme, with the party's left fringe broken off by Henry Wallace and the Southern right wing in an uproar over Mr. Truman's civil rights program.

It came at a time when Southern political leaders were not only threatening to withhold their States' electoral votes from Mr. Truman, but actually devising schemes to make good on the threat.

Mr. Truman's hat-in-the-ring announcement exploded whatever hopes the Southerners held that he might withdraw in favor of another.

By refusing to retreat on his civil rights program, the President in effect challenged Dixie to do its worst if it wanted to smash the party in November.

Senator McGrath, in talking to reporters at the White House, said that he had asked the President to explain "the present status of the Palestine situation." He said that Mr. Truman went into it in considerable detail.

"This question," McGrath said, "is one which affects the security of the Nation and probably of the world. The President will continue to handle the problem without regard to its effect on politics."

McGrath did not elaborate on this, but the reporters recalled that it was largely dissatisfaction with the Administration's handling of the Palestine question that gave victory to a Wallace-backed candidate for a House seat in the Bronx recently.

In response to questions, McGrath said that Mr. Truman's policy on Palestine was the policy of the United States Government.

Austin Speech Cited

"The President has assured me," he said, "that our original position of backing up decisions of the United Nations has not and will not be changed."

He was reminded that a New York group has charged that the recent speech of Warren Austin before the United Nations was a "betrayal" of the American policy.

McGrath reiterated that the President's policy was not "affected by political considerations."

He declined to discuss the question of whether the embargo on arms to Palestine would be lifted.

The announcement of Mr. Truman's candidacy appeared to surprise many of the Southerners on Capitol Hill. They appeared at a loss for something to say right off the bat.

However, Senator Olin D. John-

Supreme Court Votes 8 to 1 To Ban Religious Classes In Nation's Public Schools

By Dillard Stokes
Post Reporter

Religious classes in public schools were outlawed by an 8-to-1 vote of the Supreme Court yesterday.

Justice Black said for the majority that the classes used both public buildings to spread religious doctrines and the public power to force children to go to school to provide pupils for the classes.

"This," said Black, "is not separation of church and state."

Justice Reed dissented, saying he could see no harm in allowing children to be taught the religion of their parents' choice during school hours.

Victory for Freethinker

The court's ruling was a victory for Mrs. Vashti McCollum—Champaign, Ill., Freethinker—who went to court to stop the school board there from allowing religious classes once a week. She claimed the classes violated the Constitution by enforcing religion upon her son, Terry, now 15 years old, when she wanted him to grow up in the unfaith of his family.

The Champaign plan was placed in effect seven years ago by the school board and the city council of religious education. Cards were sent the parents of school children inviting them to ask for the children to be let out of classes one day a week. On this day these children went to religious classes given separately by Catholic, Protestant, Jewish and nondenominational teachers. The council—and not the school board—provided the teachers books and paid all other costs. All the school board provided was the building and the pupils. The plan was upheld by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Mrs. McCollum—whose father was Arthur G. Crowell, president of the Freethinkers Society of Rochester, N. Y.—appealed to the high court here. Many religious and civic groups came into the case, some to back Mrs. McCollum, others to defend the Champaign plan and others like it. The issue was argued before the full bench three months ago today, and was fully discussed in the four opinions in which the justices stated their views yesterday.

Black, in the majority opinion, drew largely on the views of both sides of the school bus case last year, in which the justices voted 5 to 4 to approve the use of public money to pay the bus fare of pupils going to parochial schools. But all the justices said in that case that in this country there always must be a wall between church and state. And the Champaign plan, said Black, broke down the wall.

Black went on to say that this did not show any Government hostility toward religion or religious teaching. Such a hostility, he declared, would be at war with our national tradition.

Rather, said Black, the majority was preserving the free exercise of religion that was guaranteed by the First Amendment. The amendment, he observed, rested on the idea that "both religion and government can best work to achieve their lofty aims if each is left free from the other."

Gives Broad Outline

Justice Frankfurter gave a broad outline of the place of religious teaching in the public schools. His separate statement was 20 pages long and read as though it was written to be a majority opinion.

Frankfurter was joined in his statement by Justices Jackson, Burton and Rutledge. All of the four dissented in the school bus case, when they said that even paying the bus fares of pupils in religious schools broke down the barrier that ought to stand between the church and the state.

Frankfurter recalled that a hundred years ago the States were torn by fierce disputes over religious teaching in the public schools—which were then getting their start in this country. He pointed out that many public men—themselves devoted churchgoers—such as Horace Mann, President Grant, Jeremiah Black and Elihu

2d Subpena On Steelman Unanswered

Hoffman Threatens Presidential Aide With Prosecution

By Frank Wilder
Post Reporter

Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman failed to answer a second congressional subpena to testify before a GSI strike hearing last night and was promptly threatened with prosecution.

Representative Clare E. Hoffman (R., Mich.), chairman of the special House Labor subcommittee, said he would turn over the matter to the Attorney General, the full committee and the House as soon as the evidence is completed this morning.

He also said he would seek prosecution of four union leaders who, he said, had either refused to appear or refused to answer questions in the subcommittee's investigation of the Government cafeterias dispute.

Steelman failed to show up for a hearing at 7 o'clock last night. He also did not appear in answer to a subpena Saturday at 2 p. m.

Read Into Record

Hoffman read into the record the two subpenas for Steelman—each officially stamped: "Personal Service." However, he said Assistant United States Marshal William T. Smith would have to testify as a matter of record at 9 a. m. today that he actually handed the subpenas to Steelman.

F. Albert Reiman of the Education and Labor Committee staff, testified last night that Smith told him he had served the subpena on Steelman at his White House office yesterday morning. Another staff member, Frank S. McArthur, said someone at Steelman's office told him (McArthur) on the telephone about 7:15 last night that Steelman did not intende to come to the hearing.

Commodities Again Break, Stocks Follow

Government Halts Plans to Purchase Flour for Export

Food commodities yesterday staged one of their sharpest price breaks since the record crash of February 4. New York stocks followed suit.

After the market close, the Government made public more bad news from the standpoint of market traders. The Commodity Credit Corp. of the Agriculture Department, announced that plans to buy a large amount of flour for immediate export, had been halted.

Last Wednesday Agriculture Secretary Anderson offered to buy flour equal to 9,300,000 bushels of wheat. The offer sent grain prices soaring, offsetting bearish reports of good crop weather in the wheat country.

Although the equivalent of 11,250,000 bushels was offered, all but 900,000 bushels was refused. The reason, Agriculture curtly said, was that the price for the remaining 10,350,000 bushels was too high.

The purchase offer was the first by the Government since grain prices crashed February 4. Government buyers at that time were instructed to stay out of the market until prices stabilized.

Yesterday rumors were current that the Government was trying to depress grain prices, in an effort to aid ratification of the International Wheat Agreement by Congress. That agreement, signed by 36 nations Saturday, would set a ceiling of $2 for American wheat sold for export during the next five years. It would guarantee a graduated floor—starting at $1.50 and declining 10 cents each year for the five years—for 185 million bushels of United States wheat annually.

At times yesterday, corn, soybeans and cottonseed oil were all

Finn Cabinet Votes to Open Soviet Talks

Parley on Friendship And Military Treaty To Be Held in Moscow

Helsinki, March 8 (AP).—Finland decided today to begin negotiations for a friendship and military pact with Russia—a step which may bind this northern nation to the Soviet bloc.

The decision climaxed two weeks of careful study of Soviet Premier Josef Stalin's request for such negotiations. The Finnish cabinet acted in a 90-minute session with President Juho Paasikivi.

A government announcement said:

"The President of the republic has today in the State Council decided to reply in the affirmative to the Soviet government's proposal to enter upon negotiations toward conclusion of a friendship and assistance agreement and to propose that the said negotiations take place in Moscow."

Stalin had suggested that either Moscow or Helsinki be designated as the site of the talks.

The cabinet meets again tomorrow to name Finland's representatives.

A Foreign Office spokesman said that Paasikivi's reply to Stalin "might be sent to Moscow tomorrow." Its contents, however, were a closely guarded secret, at least until Helsinki knows that the answer has reached the Russian leader's hand.

The spokesman declined to say whether the Finns would attach any conditions or counterproposals in connection with military provisions of the suggested pact.

A majority of the Finnish Parliament had favored beginning the talks, but had opposed a military alignment with the Soviet Union.

One highly placed official said the cabinet preferred Moscow as the site for the talks "for security reasons." If a Russian delegation came to Helsinki very elaborate preparations against public demonstrations would have to be made, he said.

Vandenberg European Aid Plan Triumphs

Senate's First Test Vote on ERP Results In 53-to-19 Victory

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg's leadership won a 53-to-19 triumph yesterday in the Senate's first test vote on the European Recovery Program.

The vote showed that Vandenberg held the Senate in the hollow of his hand. Republican opponents and "revisionists" of ERP turned out to be weaker than expected, and at least a dozen doubtful Senators of both parties voted exactly as Vandenberg wanted them to.

The test came on a somewhat technical amendment which was typical of many others, in that it sought to put conditions on the European recipients of American aid.

As proposed by Senators Ball (R., Minn.) and Wherry (R., Nebr.), it would have required European countries, as a condition of American help, to fix "a rate of exchange which will reflect with reasonable accuracy the actual purchasing power" of their currencies.

Vandenberg thought this was both meaningless and dangerous. He insisted that the language of the bill, calling on recipient nations "to establish or maintain a valid rate of exchange," was as fas as Congress had a right to go.

"If we attempted to spell out everything in this bill, the result would be pretty much of a hodgepodge," he said. By an overwhelming vote, the Senate took his word for it.

This morning Vandenberg will have what may be a harder job—of trying to persuade Republican House leaders to speed up the timetable of the ERP debate.

Their meeting was arranged after Secretary Marshall had visited Capitol Hill and made a personal appeal for spee dto Speaker

Boy, 5, Blinded By Arrow Going Through Keyhole

Tell City, Ind., March 8 (U.P.).—A million-to-one accident in which a homemade arrow passed through the keyhole of a closed door blinded five-year Earl Senn in one eye.

The child was sitting in the living room of his home Saturday. Outside, his brother were playing cowboys and Indians. They had made bows, and were using the slim stems of dried weeds for arrows.

One of the homemade arrows, aimed at the front door of the Senn home, passed through the keyhold and struck little Earl in the right eye.

Dr. Nicholas James said sight had been destroyed and removed the injured eye. He said the keyhole was barely large enough for the arrow to pass through.

Supreme Court Rulings Hit Price Fixing, Secret Trials

Price fixing, secret criminal trials and postal frauds were scored by the Supreme Court yesterday.

The justices came back from three weeks in chambers—writing decisions—to decide 11 cases. They used the whole four-hour session to read the 21 opinions—about 150,000 words long, in all—that stated their views.

Here are the leading rulings:

The court held 8-0 that the United States Gypsum Co. and six other firms violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by using patent license agreements which contain price-fixing provisions.

The Justice Department charged that the companies—who together comprise all manufacturers of gypsum board—combined to stabilize prices through agreements with United States Gypsum Company. This company owns certain patents and is the dominant manufacturer.

Justice Reed delivered the ruling. Justice Frankfurter wrote a concurring opinion. Justice Jackson took no part.

Government charges that 12 manufacturers of fuses violated the Sherman Anti-Trust act by conspiring to fix selling prices were upheld by a 5-to-3 vote in another case. The 12 firms make nearly all the fuse cutouts sold in the United States.

Justice Reed delivered the majority decision. Justice Burton wrote a dissent in which Chief Justice Vinson and Justice Frankfurter concurred. Justice Jackson took no part. Justice Douglas wrote an opinion concurring with the majority. Justices Black, Murphy and Rutledge joined him.

In upholding the anti-trust charges, the court at the same time refused to overrule a 1926 decision that a patent owner may determine the prices at which his licensees may sell.

The court reversed a contempt of court conviction ordered by a Michigan judge while sitting as a one-man grand jury during an investigation of gambling and asserted bribery of public officials.

Judge George B. Hartrick of Oakland County, Mich., found William Oliver guilty of contempt of court. He said Oliver gave evasive answers during questioning in a closed session in the judge's chambers. Michigan law gives the circuit judge of each county powers similar to that of a grand jury.

Justice Black delivered the 7-2 decision. Justices Frankfurter and Jackson wrote dissenting opinions. Justice Rutledge wrote an opinion concurring with the majority.

Oliver was sentenced to 60 days'

Private Detective of Meyers To Be Quizzed on Activities

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

A private detective employed by Maj. Gen. Bennett E. Meyers has been ordered to appear in District Court here for questioning concerning his interviews with Government witnesses, it was disclosed yesterday.

District Attorney George Morris Fay said a subpena was served on Leo Riley, Boston, Mass., private "eye" to be on hand today in the trial of Meyers for inducing another person to commit perjury.

There was such a stir in the courtroom when it was revealed that Meyers' private "shamus" had been interviewing a Government witness that Federal Judge Alexander Holtzoff demanded order and threatened to clear the courtroom.

Earlier in the day, Mrs. Mildred Lamarre, lovely brunette wife of Bleriot H. Lamarre, "dummy" president of Aviation Electric Corp. told the jury that on at least five occasions Meyers asked her and her husband to lie to Senate investigators.

Pleading guilty earlier to perjury before the subcommittee, Lamarre said Meyers asked him to lie under oath to conceal the AAF procurement officer's $150,000 wartime profits from the aircraft accessories corporation.

3 Federal Officials Called In Condon Loyalty Hearing

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

The House Un-American Activities Committee, preparing for open hearings on the loyalty case of Dr. E. U. Condon, summoned three Federal officials to appear before it this morning in closed session.

The officials were connected with the Commerce Department loyalty board which cleared Condon, director of the National Bureau of Standards, of all doubts on his loyalty.

Those called to testify are Oliver Short, Commerce Department personnel director; Adrian Fisher, a former member of the board who is now general counsel of the Atomic Energy Commission, and John E. Towné, secretary of the board.

Meantime, the Joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee yesterday deferred a decision on whether to conduct an investigation of its own on Condon and on the whole problem of Federal scientists' loyalty inquiries.

Committee Chairman Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) said his group met today to consider the question, but decided it did not yet have sufficient information on which to base a decision. He added that he hoped that in the next three or

PEOPLE In The NEWS

Dr. John R. Steelman

Presidential Adviser Dr. John R. Steelman, for years the Nation's ace trouble shooter in labor disputes, appeared to be in some trouble of his own yesterday.

Steelman

He apparently did not show up in answer to subpena as a witness before the Congressional subcommittee investigating the GSI labor dispute.

Born in 1900 in Alabama, he worked his way through five colleges, offtimes as a migratory worker following wheat harvests and logging in cypress swamps.

By 1926, he was an instructor and graduate student at Harvard. That same year he acquired his doctorate in sociology and economics at the University of North Carolina. He was still teaching, but at Alabama College, Montevallo, Ala., when the then Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins came down to deliver a commencement address.

Won over by the labor philosophy of the Secretary, Dr. Steelman followed her to Washington to enter the Labor Department's conciliation service. Four years later, on the death of Hugh L. Kerwin, Dr. Steelman was appointed to Kerwin's post as director.

Dr. Steelman resigned in November, 1944; took a filing at public relations work in New York, and returned to Washington in June, 1946, to become director of War Mobilization and Reconversion, an intermediate step to appointment as assistant to the President, conferred by that year's end.

Justice Hugo Black

Teetotaler Baptist Hugo Black, who yesterday read the majority opinion of the United States Supreme Court outlawing religious classes in public schools, is a self-made man.

Black

Associate Justice Black rose to his present position as senior Justice on the Nation's supreme tribunal from an humble beginning in a tiny cabin in Clay County, Ala. The self-styled "Clay County hillbilly" pulled himself up by his bootstraps in the typical American tradition.

His most serious crisis—when the Ku Klux Klan label was pinned on him after his appointment to the highest bench—he weathered successfully. Three days before assuming this post he spoke over a Nation-wide radio hookup, saying simply, "I did join the Ku Klux Klan about 15 years ago. I later resigned. I never rejoined."

Soon after he took his seat on October 4, 1937, Justice Black earned a reputation as a judicial "liberal."

Now 62, he was first elected to the Senate in 1926, where he served until his Supreme Court appointment by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Through his forthrightness he has several times become embroiled with his fellow justices, notably Justices Felix Frankfurter and Robert Jackson.

In his early public life, Justice Black served as city solicitor and city judge in Birmingham. Following service in World War I he returned to private practice of law until his Senate election.

He is married and has three children. He is a Mason, Odd Fellow and Knight of Pythias.

Forty-nine-year-old Horan, now in his third term in the House, was born in Wenatchee, Wash. He still calls it home. After studying agriculture at the State College of Washington, he returned there to "grow, pack, store and ship" apples. He's been doing it ever since.

Truman Says He Will Run

ston of South Carolina made this statement:

"I'm for General Marshall or General Eisenhower (both of whom have said they cannot be drafted). I believe either can be elected hands down. As it stands, I don't see how Truman can possibly get the Solid South."

Senator John L. McClellan of Arkansas recalled that he was one of the first to say publicly that President Truman couldn't win in November.

"I still say he won't win," McClellan told reporters.

Colmar Noncommittal

Representative William T. Colmer of Mississippi, chairman of the Southern House bloc threatening to bolt, declined to predict that Mr. Truman would lose the Solid South. He did say, however, that the President "will have hard sledding in the South on that kind of a program."

Talk has been heard in political circles that McGrath was getting impatient because of Mr. Truman's hesitancy in making an announcement.

The Rhode Islander had a determined look as he went into Mr. Truman's office yesterday at 3:30 p. m., accompanied by Sullivan. Later on, following the 90-minute conference, there was no outward evidence that he had to battle with the President.

Asked about Mr. Truman's frame of mind, he replied:

"Lovely. He was very pleasant, affable and rather willing to enter into a long discussion about Clark Clifford's fishing ability."

A reporter wanted to know if the hat-in-the-ring announcement had been made because of rumors that the big-city bosses "wanted to dump the President."

McGrath scoffed at this and said that, as national chairman, he was glad that the statement had come and put at rest all such rumors.

Anti-Truman Bill Sent to Va. House

Richmond, Va., March 8 (AP).—Governor Tuck's anti-Truman bill came out of the House Privileges and Election committee by a lopsided 11 to 1 vote today and moved into the House of Delegates for probable passage tomorrow.

Before the committee voted it out, however, it received assurances from an Administration spokesman that a Virginia voter wouldn't endanger his standing as a Democrat by supporting the national party nominee if the State party convention should indorse some other candidate.

The question was posed by delegate Delamater Davis of Norfolk. Suppose Mr. Truman were nominated at the Philadelphia convention, he asked, and the Virginia Democrats put up another candidate. If, then, an avowed Virginia Democrat voted for the national rather than the State candidate would he be eligible to vote in the 1949 state Democratic primaries?

"I can answer that one easily," said Floor Leader E. Blackburn Moore, pilot of the bill. "He would.

"Attorney General Saunders, nearly 20 years ago, ruled that we do not have a primary for the office of President—only a convention. Thus, persons who vote in a general election are not affected by their action in the primary the next year. That opinion has stood up for 20 years, and the acting attorney general concurs in it now."

ing to say whether he would accept a nomination.

[While General MacArthur's statement mentioned no political party, his name has been filed in Wisconsin's Republican presidential primary April 6, where he will be in a three-way contest with Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, and Harold Stassen of Minnesota. His name also has been entered in Nebraska's free-for-all preference primary April 13. He has been mentioned most consistently in connection with the Republication nomination, though some Southern Democrats, angry at President Truman's civil rights program, have discussed the general as a possible candidate around whom Southerners might rally.—Editor's note.]

Text of Statement

The full text of his statement:

"I have been informed that petitions have been filed in Madison signed by many of my fellow citizens of Wisconsin, presenting my name to the electorate for consideration at the primary on April 6. I am deeply grateful for this spontaneous display of friendly confidence. No man could fail to be profoundly stirred by such a public movement in this hour of momentous import, national and international, temporal and spiritual.

"While it seems unnecessary for me to repeat that I do not actively seek or covet any office and have no plans for leaving my post in Japan, I can say, and with due humility, that I would be recreant to all my concepts of good citizenship were I to shrink because of the hazards and responsibilities involved from accepting any public duty to which I might be called by the American people."

His announcement was regarded here as a go ahead signal for the MacArthur campaign in the United States, which in the past has been given no direct encouragement from the general himself. Some observers said it showed he has decided he has a good chance of obtaining the nomination even while remaining in Japan.

In the past he has avoided all direct comment, saying merely that he would remain in Japan "until my task is completed," or until called away "by extraordinary circumstances."

There was no indication in today's terse announcement what factors finally prompted it. The growing importance of the United States' anti-Communist stand appeared to be one of them, however.

MacArthur has counted among his proudest occupation accomplishments the relatively unimportant political strength of Communists here. And he recently urged the American Congress to approve military aid to China, to help her fight against rebel Communist armies.

Southerners Get GOP Aid To Beat Civil Rights Rider

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Southern Democrats with Republican assistance yesterday overwhelmingly defeated a House attempt to tie anti-discrimination legislation to a Government money bill.

The civil rights rider was offered as an amendment to the $1,017,851,000 Labor Department-Federal Security agency bill by Representative Vito Marcantonio (A. L. P., N. Y.).

It was rejected by 119 to 40 standing vote. The House turned down a request for tellers and a roll call vote also was averted.

Marcantonio Chides GOP

The Republican majority, anxious to keep Southern Democratic fire trained on President Truman, earlier had decided to drop the amendment, which goes beyond the President's own civil rights program.

Originally drawn by Representative Frank B. Keefe (R., Wis.), the amendment would withhold Federal hospital, vocational and other grants to States not providing equal job and educational opportunities to members of all races. A subcommittee had approved the rider unanimously but the full House Appropriation Committee last week turned it down, 25 to 6.

Marcantonio yesterday revived the proposal in its original form, chided Republicans for their slim attendance and noted the large number of Dixie Democrats on the floor.

"Lip Service" Charged

"This time it was not Lee who surrendered," he told the House. "It was the followers of Grant who surrendered. And where are the Truman Democrats?"

Charging Republicans and Northern Democrats with rendering only "lip service" to the civil rights program, he called on them to vote for the amendment. No member of either party replied. Rejection by a standing vote followed, with Southern Democrats standing en masse and about a third as many Republicans voting with them. The 40 who voted for the amendment were about evenly distributed on both sides of the aisle.

Only opportunity for a record vote would come normally on a motion to recommit the bill. A Southerner, Representative Joe Hendricks (D., Fla.), was recognized to make this motion. It was a simple move to recommit the money measure, without any reference to the anti-discrimination rider. No roll call was asked or ordered.

Measure Sent to Senate

The $1,017,851,000 measure, whittled $30,119,379 under the President's request for the Labor Department, the Federal Security Agency, and five related agencies, was sent to the Senate without a change on the House floor.

The Labor Department received $12,498,200 for the next fiscal year, a below-Budget cut of $4,102,100. Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach promptly charged the Republican House majority "has aimed another blow at efficient and useful government."

"The appropriation bill passed today is a body blow at labor," said Schwellenbach's statement. It would deprive the department of funds and services which have been widely used by both labor and management in peaceful collective bargaining. It proposes to stab in the back every veteran who when he entered the service was guaranteed the job he left to protect his country."

Looks to Senate

Schwellenbach hit specifically at House elimination of further funds for the Department's Bureau of Veterans Reemployment rights and cuts in the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"The reduction proposed in the BLS will force the discontinuance of some well-established and widely used services and reports," he said. "These reports are depended on by business management, labor unions, the general public, Federal and State governments and by the committees of Congress for guidance in the development of economic policy.

"I hope and expect the Senate will repair the damage voted by the House."

Amendments Rejected

Representative John E. Fogarty (D., R. I.) told the House the Labor Department was cut about 25 per cent and offered a series of amendments to restore part of the slash. All were rejected.

The bill also provides $239,788,500 for the Federal Security agency, a cut of $23,367,279. It provides $7,200,000 for the National Labor Relations Board, a reduction of $2,200,000, and $2,640,000 for the Federal Mediation and Conciliation service, a $450,000 cut. The National Mediation board received the full $862,550 the President requested, and the Railroad Retirement board also received the full amount, $642,416,000.

Gov. Dewey, Stassen in Test

dent Truman is alone in the field.

A possible dark horse in the Republican race—although he does not want to be—is Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower. Two men running as delegates are pledged to the general and his name will appear on the ballot.

The daily newspaper in the New Hampshire capital—the Concord Monitor—estimated that more than $50,000 has been spent by Dewey and Stassen supporters in an attempt to get the Granite State's handful of delegates. This is six times as much as has ever been spent before.

Gov. Charles M. Dale—a Dewey delegate—told a press conference this afternoon that he expected Dewey to win seven of the eight delegate seats. He conceded a possible victory for Republican National Committeeman Frank Sulloway, who has been indorsed by Stassen.

Political observers here see in this primary a test of the personalized campaign tactics of Stassen, who has traveled close to 200,000 miles speaking almost daily since he openly announced himself a presidential candidate. He has made three campaign trips to New Hampshire alone—two of them within the last five weeks.

Maj. John H. Greenaway, chairman of the Dewey campaign committee, said that Stassen's visits were bound to be a "factor"—but told reporters he felt Stassen's appeal was "more emotional than anything else."

Sen. Hatch Not to Run Again, Anderson Silent on Candidacy

Senator Carl A. Hatch (D., N. Mex.), yesterday announced that he would not be a candidate for reelection.

The announcement at once turned Washington attention to Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson — named recently in rumors as a possible candidate for Hatch's place.

Anderson, by coincidence, was in Albuquerque when the Hatch announcement was made.

"I'm going to find out what the people out here want," Anderson told The Washington Post last night.

"Then, after a stopover at my boyhood home in North Dakota tomorrow night, I'm coming back to Washington before I make any announcement.

"I want to talk to President Truman and Mrs. Anderson before I decide."

Anderson disclosed that he had talked with President Truman by long distance during the day. "But you know—with the chance of so many listening—nothing much was determined," he explained.

Hatch stated that "I have definitely decided to accept appointment to the Federal bench in New Mexico in the event it is offered to me, either by nomination now or afer the expiration of my present term, whichever course is determined to be in strict compliance with the constitution.

"This necessarily means I cannot continue as a candidate for the Senate."

As Hatch was in the Senate when the law increasing the pay of Federal judges was passed, he is barred from taking over the position at the new salary scale until he is out of office.

This will necessitate waiting until January 3, when his term expires.

American Bar Backs Split Income Tax Bill

District Lawyer Charges GOP Bill 'Discriminates'

The American Bar Association yesterday went on record for split income privileges for married couples in the GOP's tax reduction measure but a Washington tax attorney bitterly attacked the provisions.

Allan H. W. Higgins of Boston, chairman of a Bar Association tax subcommittee, told the Senate Finance Committee husbands and wives should be allowed to divide their family income evenly for tax purposes.

But Paul J. Foley, Washington attorney, charged the split income provision discriminates against 8,593,000 household heads, including widows, widowers, divorcees, separates and unmarried heads of households. He said 1,315,000 persons in this group are rearing their own children under 18.

Foley testified that only about five per cent of the proposed $1,045,000,000 in split income relief would go to couples having less than $5000. Practically a billion would go to 4 per cent of all taxpaying couples with income over $10000, he said.

"For those who actually benefit, splitting substitutes for a rational determination of reduction a ruthless mathematical formula which allows phenomenal reductions for a few, and distributes a billion dollars in potential revenue without reference to need, sociological considerations or bality to pay," Foley said. "If ever adopted, splitting will be almost impossible to remove because of political considerations."

The House-passed Knutson tax reduction bill already includes the split income principle and the Senate committee is reported ready to approve a similar provision this week.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg of the CIO's research committee, meanwhile called the Knutson bill "a tax steal for the wealthy and a stab in the back for the poor" in testimony before the Senate group. Ruttenberg said the House bill is "only slightly better" than the two Republican-sponsored measures the President killed with vetoes last year.

Tanker Disabled

...d Rescued ...rom Ship ...n High Surf

By The Associated Press

Crews of two disabled vessels were safe last night as a Coast Guard cutter sped to the aid of a third stricken vessel.

Coast Guardsmen pulled 21 crewmen to safety from the motorship Norfolk. An injured radio operator from the Norfolk, aground off Morehead City, N. C., had been taken ashore earlier.

The Norfolk's crew was brought to shore by breeches bouy after spending a sleepless night as 18-foot seas pounded their ship.

The S. S. Gulf of Mexico was en route to New York with six men removed from the storm-damaged schooner, Black Duck, 11 hours before the 65-foot vessel sank 100 miles off Cape Henry.

Dr. Alexander Forbes, of Milton, Mass., is the owner of the Black Duck. She sailed from Newport News March 4 for Palm Beach, Fla. Her home port is Boston.

The Coast Guard Cutter Ingham was headed to the assistance of the American tanker J. W. Van Dyke, disabled 29 miles south of Diamond Shoals Lightship by failure of her propulsion machinery.

"Vessel has no propulsion," the tanker's master radioed. "Main electric propelling motor grounded out. Possible can repair to proceed at reduced speed to Hampton Roads. Request your vessel stand by us."

Meyers Sleuth To Be Quizzed

mand of Army Air Force procurement, defended himself before the Senate War Investigating Committee on the ground that he founded the corporation as a favor to the Lamarres because of a "love affair" with Mrs. Lamarre, his former secretary.

In District Court, the defense has not directly raised this issue.

But as the Government released the witness, Defense Counsel Robert T. Bushnell strode dramatically to the front of the courtroom and shouted:

"Are you now on friendly terms with the defendant, Meyers?"

Stiffening, Mrs. Lamarre clenched her fists. Her face was white.

"No," she replied in a voice that died six inches from her lips.

"Are you hostile to Meyers?" pressed Bushnell.

"I would say," replied the witness with icicles of scorn dropping from each word, "that I have only contempt for a man who would sacrifice friends to save his own neck."

Thought Meyers a "Friend"

Mrs. Lamarre testified that she and her husband had always looked upon the 52-year-old retired officer as "a family friend."

Sarcastically the defense asked when this "friendly feeling" had changed.

It was after Meyers' testimony before the subcommittee, the 35-year-old college beauty contest winner replied.

Like her husband, Mrs. Lamarre testified that Meyers had fixed up "a concocted story" to bamboozle the Senate committee and had assured her that so long as everybody told the same yarn there was nothing the committee could do about it.

Meyers is charged with inducing Lamarre to swear falsely about ownership of Aviation Electric, ownership of a $3000 Cadillac car, and payment for a $10,000 redecorating job on the general's lavish Hotel 2400 apartment.

Testimony on Auto

The Government called witnesses yesterday to establish:

1. That Meyers, and Meyers only, negotiated for the purchase of the 1942 blue Cadillac Fleetwing.

2. That Meyers signed the application for title of the car in the name of Aviation Slectric Corp., giving his own Hotel 2400 apartment as business address of the corporation.

3. That Meyers kept the blue car, as well as his brown Cadillac sedan, in the Hotel 2400 garage from January, 1042, to the summer of 1944.

It was during the testimony of Melvin J. Taylor, who has been manager of the Hotel 2400 Garage for 14 years, that the disclosure concerning the private "op" hired by Meyers was made.

Written Statement Obtained

Finally, Bushnell asked the witness if he hadn't told Riley in a written statement that he had seen the general only once or twice in the blue Cadillac car.

Assistant District Attorney Edward Molenof drew from Taylor a statement that he had not known Riley was a private detective employed by Meyers, and that Riley had not given him a copy of his statement after he had signed it.

Bushnell demanded to know how many investigators for the Government had interviewed Taylor.

Only one, Taylor replied, an investigator for the Senate War Investigating Committee before last year's hearings.

Title Application Produced

Edward Joseph Rogers, record clerk for the Department of Vehicles and Traffic, brought the record of Meyers application for a title for the 1942 blue Cadillac.

Vernon M. Knox, a Cadillac salesman testified that he was instructed by Meyers to send the bill for the car to Aviation Electric Corporation, B. H. Lamarre, president.

Earlier George Shaffer of the Savings Department, Winters National Bank in Dayton, Ohio, testified that the most ever deposited in a joint account of Meyers and Lamarre in Dayton was 73.

As court was about to adjourn, the defense asked Judge Holtzoff to see to it that their detective Riley was not held here indefinitely as a witness.

Holtzoff told Bushnell that the subpena called for Riley's appearance this morning and failure on his part to respond would be "a serious matter." He further said he would not dictate the order of witnesses to-counsel for either side.

Police Baffled In Tracing Killer Of Meyrovitch

Police were at a dead end yesterday in their hunt for the killer of Meyer Meyrovitch, 39, shot to death March 1 in his grocery store at 90 O st. nw.

"There have been no arrests and there is nothing new," commented Capt. Robert S. Bryant, acting chief of detectives.

Detectives still are seeking several school girls reported to have seen a man dash from Meyrovitch's store the night of the slaying, Bryant said. Police hope the girls, if found, can add to the meager description of a stranger seen in the neighborhood at the time of the murder.

down as far as they can go in one day. Towards the close slight gains set in, but at the finish:

Wheat was down from 5½ to 9¼ cents a bushel.

Corn was down 6⅛ to 8 cents (the limit) a bushel.

Soybeans were down the limit, or 8 cents a bushel.

Oats fell 2⅛ to 4½ cents.

Cotton was down $4$4.30 to $6.75 a bale (500 pounds.)

Top hogs were from $1 to $1.50 per 100 pounds lower.

Cattle were steady to 50 cents per 100 pounds lower.

Several Reasons Advanced

Several reasons were advanced for the break:

1. Uneasiness over Government plans—with rumors that the flour bids were going to be refused—later proved partly true.

2. Tremendously improved weather conditions in the southwest winter wheat belt, where the heaviest February rainfall in 20 years has offset an unusually dry planting season last fall.

3. A rush of livestock to market caused by warnings that a packinghouse strike this week may shut down the nation's largest stockyards. The large receipts tended to depress prices.

2d Subpena Unanswered

Steelman on what authority the White House has sought to settle the 9-week-old strike. He read to reporters a section of the United States code that provides a fine and jail sentence for refusal to heed a congressional subpena or refusal to answer questions.

"I would like to know if presidential advisers are exempt from our subpenas," Hoffman declared.

Asks Reporters Why

"Why do you think he won't come heer to testify?" Hoffman asked reporters after the hearing.

One reporter suggested it may be that Steelman resents subpenas, because Congressional committees customarily summon high Government officials without resorting to the subpena device.

"Oh, that's only procedure," Hoffman replied.

Steelman could not be reached for comment last nightt.

The union leaders against whom Hoffman may seek action, he said, are former President Richard A. Bancroft of the striking United Cafeteria and Restaurant Workers (UPW-CIO); Business Agent Oliver T. Palmer, Abram Flaxer, president of the parent union, United Public Workers, and its director of negotiations, Alfred Bernstein.

Strong At Dead End

Another development in the strike was a statement by George E. Strong, Government-appointed conciliator, who said he was at a dead end in his efforts to settle the dispute. He said this after he was informed the GSI board of trustees refused yesterday to reconsider its insistence on one change in Strong's settlement proposal.

He said he would report the stalemate today to Federal Works Administrator Philip B. Fleming, who appointed Strong February 16 on White House orders. Strong said he would tell Fleming that "I shall be pleased to be relieved of this assignment whenever a settlemnt will be facilitatd thereby."

The union has accepted Strong's proposal entirely—even to accepting a GSI amendment ruling out future direct negotiations with the union. GSI, however, wants to take out of Strong's hands the authority to decide specific cases in which the relative efficiency of a striker as against a replacement worker is disputed.

Under such a clause, Strong charged, GSI could "defeat the whole purpose of the settlement proposal."

Twenty million visitors are expected to descend on Washington in 1950, if plans for the observance of the city's sesqui-centennial are carried out.

Members of the National Capital Sesqui-Centennial Commission met with President Truman yesterday to discuss first phases of the program, intended to be financed by congressional appropriation.

Mr. Truman is chairman ex officio of the commission, and Carter T. Barron, Eastern division manager for Loew's, Inc., vice chairman.

Dates for the observance are from April 15, anniversary of the day in 1791 when the cornerstone of the District of Columbia was laid on the edge of the Potomac River near Alexandria, to November 22, anniversary of the day in 1800 when Congress first assembled on Capitol Hill.

Barron announced an executive committee has been appointed to draw up plans for the celebration. Joseph C. McGarraghy, chairman of the Greater National Capital Committee, Washington Board of Trade, is to act as chairman. Other members are Commissioner J. Russell Young, Robert V. Fleming, Senator C. Douglass Buck (R., Del.) and Representative Sol Bloom (D., N. Y.).

President Truman, who called yesterday's session, said he believed the sesqui-centennial should be celebrated "not just within the confines of the District of Columbia, but all over the Nation."

The commission, in addition to those on the executive committee, includes Senator Arthur Capper (R., Kans.), Senator Spessard L. Holland (D., Fla.), Representative Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.), Representative Walt Horan (R., Wash.), Senator Arthur Vandenberg (R., Mich.), Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr. (R., Mass.), Robert Woods Bliss, former ambassador to Argentina, and Mrs. Philip L. Graham, wife of the publisher of The Washington Post.

3 to Testify in Condon Case

four days it could acquire the data it needed.

Condon had appealed to Hickenlooper to arrange a full investigation by the Joint Committee. The noted scientist had made the request after he was accused last week, in a report by a subcommittee of the Un-American Activities body, of having "knowingly or unknowingly" associated with Soviet espionage agents.

Hickenlooper said his committee had no desire to invade the legal field of another committee. But, he made clear, under the McMahon Act his group had a responsibility for anything that concerned atomic energy.

Thus, Hickenlooper appeared to keep the door open for an investigation later, but made no predictions.

Robert E. Stripling, chief investigator for the House Un-American Activities Committee, said yesterday that that group definitely intended to hold full and open hearings on the Condon case. A date for their beginning has not yet been announced.

He said the committee had ordered a fourth subpena for Joseph McDaniel, a former member of the Commerce Department Loyalty Board. It has not yet been served.

One of the individuals summoned, Towne, appeared before a subcommittee of the House group Friday. An earlier subpena had ordered him to produce the loyalty board file on Condon. Towne refused, on orders from Commerce Secretary Harriman. He was not required to bring the papers in his appearance today.

House Speaker Joseph W. Martin, meanwhile, said Congress may pass a law requiring the Commerce Department to turn over its loyalty files to the subcommittee. He said the Condon case had brought to a head the issue whether an executive agency can legally withhold information from Congress.

"There's no time like the present to settle this controversy once and for all," he said.

Suit Follows Md. Slaying

A suit which seeks to force sale of property owned by 10 relatives of Mrs. Florence McAllister, 29, slain Burtonsville, Md., matron, was filed yesterday in Montgomery Circuit Court.

Plaintiff in the suit and husband of the woman whose battered body was found December 10, 1946, is Edgar McAllister, currently serving a 20-year sentence in Atlanta Penitentiary for rape committed in Germany while he was in the Army.

Through his attorneys, McAllister seeks court appointment of a trustee for purposes of selling the 25-acre tract in Burtonsville and subsequent division of the proceeds among the owners.

Now serving a life term in Maryland Penitentiary for Mrs. McAllister's slaying is Bruce Davis, 32, former Laurel, Md., aircraft mechanic.

The Finnish Government seems to be on the point of accepting Mr. Stalin's invitation to negotiate concerning a Soviet-Finnish pact of alliance. It really has no alternative. Undoubtedly few Finns would go out of their way to seek such an alliance. Yet most of them would probably admit that it must be accepted as a part of the price for continued non-interference by Russia in Finland's internal affairs. As one of the party leaders in Helsinki remarked, somewhat caustically, if a letter signed by Stalin asks for the opening of negotiations, "then negotiations must follow."

Looking at it one way, the Finns would not be giving up much. They know already that their country cannot afford an independent foreign policy. That was made abundantly clear last summer (as it was in the case of Czechoslovakia) when the invitation to take part in the preliminary Marshall plan discussions had to be turned down on orders from Moscow. This much, then, has already been lost, and it cannot be taken away again by the signing of a piece of paper pledging Finland to an alliance from which it could not in any case escape. What is now at stake is the retention of that freedom in domestic affairs which Finland and Czechoslovakia were allowed last summer to retain, on sufferance as it were, and which the latter country has just lost.

Ever since December, 1943, Czechoslovakia has had a treaty of military alliance with the Soviet Union, and this treaty specifically guaranteed non-interference by either country in the affairs of the other. Therefore, the Finns cannot glean much comfort in this regard from the treaty offer. The only thing that is certain is that refusal to sign a treaty would bring quick and forceful action to wipe out Finnish liberties. Acquiescence may carry a reprieve.

While, as noted above, the treaty would not, in itself, take from the Finns anything they have not already lost (assuming that it conforms to the pattern of other treaties with Soviet dependencies), the timing of the demand is ominous. That it immediately followed the climactic act of the Prague tragedy suggests the war of nerves. It comes, also, at the beginning of an election campaign. In Finland, as in Czechoslovakia, the Communists may feel they cannot afford to have their popularity tested in a free election. If so, means will be found of holding the election under what may euphemistically be called more favorable conditions. In the past, the Russians have set a premium on getting full reparations deliveries from Finland, and appear to have felt that the best way was to let the Finns run their own show. This is still the brightest hope for Finland, but the time may be near when the Kremlin will no longer regard reparations as the most important consideration.

What it all adds up to is that the Finns know that if they don't sign a treaty, they lose; if they do sign, they may be allowed to go on playing for a while; but still, they can never win. It is hardly a pleasant outlook. (from the New York Herald Tribune)

Called 'Partition'

U.N. Officials Fight Korea Voting Plan

Seoul, Korea, March 8 (U.P.).—Representatives of Canada and Syria on the United Nations Korean Commission expressed sharp opposition today to the "partition" of Korea which they said would result from the Southern-zone elections ordered by the U. N. Little Assembly.

Canada's Dr. George Patterson declared at the sixteenth meeting of the commission that the decision to hold elections "runs completely contrary . . . to the almost-unanimous views" of the commissioners.

Later, Patterson said separate elections in United States-occupied South Korea would be considered a "serious matter" by the Canadian government.

Alternate Syrian Delegate Yusin Mughir said the Arab states already had experienced a bitter taste of partition elsewhere, and would oppose any action which would split Korea permanently.

Canada and Australia, both members of the commission, voted against the election proposal in the Little Assembly last month. Syria, with most other Arab states, abstained. The other five commission members voted for the decision.

The Little Assembly directed the commission to hold elections "wherever possible" which means, in effect, the United States-occupied zone. Russia, occupying North Korea, has boycotted the commission completely.

Committee Acts On Urgent Plea of Military Leaders

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Acting on the urgent plea of top defense chiefs, the Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday voted to begin full hearings on universal military training.

Chairman Chan Gurney (D., S. Dak.) said the military officials had warned the group that it will take America 18 months to mobilize without UMT and only 6 months if the training plan is put into effect.

The committee heard Secretary of Defense James Forrestal and the civilian and military heads of the three security departments behind closed doors yesterday morning and then voted unanimously for full, public hearings on UMT and the whole field of national defense.

"They told us they must have UMT or a return of the draft," said Senator Edward V. Robertson of Wyoming, ranking Republican of the group. "Otherwise the Army, National Guard and Reserve cannot be maintained at strength.

"The country should know that the reason we decided unanimously to go ahead with this bill and a general review of the entire defense situation is the real seriousness of the world situation."

Gurney said the hearings will open as soon as possible, probably next week.

He made public estimates submitted by Forrestal, putting the cost of the UMT proper at $1,753,700,000 by 1953—when the program gets fully underway. The cost next year, if Congress passes the bill before adjournament, would be $880,400,000, about twice what President Truman estimated in his budget message.

In addition, the compulsory training would build the National Guard and other reserve components to their full authorized strength. Anual cost of training and equipping these forces by 1953 was roughly estimated at $2,259,700,000 by Forrestal, though he voiced belief that unification would cut this figure by 600 millions.

The 1949 budget now provides 586 millions for training of the reserve, so passage of UMT would involve an increase in the defense budget by 1953 of approximately three billion dollars.

Cost of the UMT program would hit its peak in 1952 when nonrecurring expenditures for rehabilitation of camps, etc., would boost the over-all outlay to $4,281,700,000 for training plus the reserves.

Senator Gurney said approval of the plan will add only 483 millions to the President's budget next year and "is the thing that'll do us the most good now to maintain peace without disrupting the fiscal program."

U. S. Women Aides Killed In Indo-China

Miss James Mrs. Skewes

Saigon, Indochina, March 8 (AP). Two American women employed by the United States State Department were shot to death near Saigon last night. Their attackers were presumed to be anti-French guerillas.

The women's jeep, found twisted and burned west of the Saigon airport, was flying an American flag.

Victims of the shooting were Mrs. Jeanne R. Skewes, 32, of Evanston, Ill., and Miss Lydia Ruth James, 30, of Hillsdale, Ind. They were the first American civilians killed in Indochina fighting since VJ-Day.

It was believed the women were returning from a pleasure drive just at dusk when attacked. Miss James' body had several bullet wounds in the head. It was thrown clear of the jeep.

French police officials said they did not know whether the machine-gunning set the jeep afire, or whether the attackers realized they had killed women neutrals and sought to destroy the evidence.

John Hamlin, American consul general, said Mrs. Skewes, was a librarian in Saigon for the United States Information Service. She was a wartime employe of the Office of War Information in San Francisco. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Workman, live in Phoenix, Ariz.

Miss James was a secretary in the consulate general. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Otto James, live in Hillside, Ind.

Deaths Being Probed By State Department

By the United Press

The State Department said yesterday that it is investigating the death of two of its American women employes who were shot yesterday near Saigon, French Indo-China.

An official report from United States Consul John Hamlin in Saigon gave no indication of who did the shooting, but he said an investigation was underway.

Mrs. Skewes, 33, was a native of Paris, but became a naturalized American in 1927.

British Navy Held Reduced Dangerously

London, March 8 (AP).—Winston Churchill charged the Labor government todayy with weakening the Royal Navy at a time of increasing danger.

"India has gone down one drain and the admiralty proclaim that the home fleet has gone down another," he said Churchill, leader of tthe Conservative opposition.

He took the floor in the House of Commons after John Dugdale, financial secretaryy for the admiralty, declared the Royal Navy was still a formidable fighting force, second only in size to that of the United States.

Dugdale made his statement as the House opened debate on Navy estimates for 1948-49. Replying to critics of the government's program Dugdale said:

"Far from there beeing any cause for alarm, there is every reason to be confident today in the state of the navy."

Churchill said the government had weakened Britain's hand in foreign affairs by scrapping eight battleships, but Defense Minister A. V. Alexander said the scrapping was ordered because the ships were outmoded.

Vote Backs Schuman

Paris, March 8 (U.P.).—The National Assembly upheld Premier Robert Schuman again today by passing his forced loan bill by a vote of 315 to 255.

The government's margin of 60 votes was the largest since the Assembly began its article-by-article debate last Friday.

Police dispersed without violence a Communist-called demonstration against the bill of 300 merchants in the Tuileries Gardens.

The bill would compel business men and farmers to invest from 20 to 70 per cent of excess profits in 10-year government bonds. It is a pillar of Schuman's antiinflation program.

The bill now goes to the upper houre—the Council of the Republic—for action.

Greek Army Victory Seen By Van Fleet

Athens, March 8 (AP).—Maj. Gen. James A. Van Fleet, head of the United States military mission, predicted today a sweeping victory this year for the Greek army, which has been engaged for months in fighting leftist guerillas.

Van Fleet has just made a five-day inspection of combat commands in northern and eastern Greece with Lieut. Gen. Dmitries Yadzis, commander of the Greek army. Van Fleet said he is "tremendously impressed with the quality of the soldiers."

His statement, in part, said:

"The army is well organized, trained and equipped. Much new equipment has recently been received. Much more will soon be in the hands of both the regular army and the national defense battalions.

"One significant point which was evident in all communities is that the civilian population is solid in supporting the army. With a united country and a loyal and determined army, supported by the air force and navy, I am very confident the Greek people will secure a sweeping victory in 1948."

Rebels Shell Greek Post

Athens, Greece, March 8 (U.P.).—Greek guerilla artillery shelled a United Nations Balkan Investigating Committee post in northern Greece, apparently without causing casualties or serious damage, Athens newspapers reported today.

The Greek general staff announced that guerilla cannon, firing "from the direction of the Yugoslav border," bombarded three towns in the Lake Doirani sector, north of Salonika, in the area visited yesterday by Maj. Gen. James A. Van Fleet, United States military chief in Greece.

The communique said 20 shells were fired Saturday into the villages of Sourmena and Doirani, and 8 into the village of Mikrovrysi.

Doirani is 15 miles north of Kilkis, where Van Fleet narrowly escaped injury yesterday in a guerilla plot to blow up his train.

The Army group of the United States Aid Mission announced today that a group of C-47 transport planes, fully loaded with supplies, had been flown in from Germany.

Today's shipment of two-engined transports for Greece was the second in recent weeks.

2d Protest Note Contends Potsdam Pact Violated

Moscow, March 8 (U.P.).—Russia, in a second protest against United States-British-French negotiations on Germany, charged today that the western allies had paralyzed the Allied Control Council and violated the Potsdam agreement by which the Council of Foreign Ministers was formed.

Russia said the western Allies were splitting not only Germany but all of Europe into two camps and were building up the heavy industries of the Ruhr, thus making future aggression by Germany possible.

The note of protest was handed to the three western nations Saturday by the Russian embassies in the respective capitals.

"The actions of the British, American and French representatives have paralyzed the control council in Germany and undermined its significance," the note said.

". . . The London conference . . . on the German question points to the idea that at present it is not only a question of turning into failure of the agreement on the control council in Germany but also of turning into failure the Potsdam agreement on the Council of Ministers of Foreign Affairs."

There was no amplification of these statements and the note did not suggest any future Russian course of action.

(It has been persistently suggested that Russia might break up the Control Council and even the Foreign Ministers Council and also might try to force the western allies out of Berlin, which is surrounded by Russian-occupied territory.)

In its note Russia rejected a United States-British-French reply to its first protest against the London talks, into which the Benelux countries—Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg—have now been drawn.

Hope Dim for Settling Fisheries Board Row

Annapolis, Md., March 8 (AP).—The prospect of ending a Tidewater Fisheries Commission dispute dimmed again today when a conference between Governor Lane and Chairman John E. Clark was called off.

The meeting was postponed at the request of Clark, who failed to suggest another date.

Lane said he had no idea of withdrawing the request for Clark's resignation, asked because of dissension within the commission.

Meanwhile, David H. Wallace, executive secretary of the commission, said he expected a commission meeting would be held Wednesday.

GI Is Shot By Russian

Reed said he arrived at the scene a few minutes after Grunden had been knocked to the sidewalk and shot in the back by the Russian guard.

Reed said he found Grunden lying unattended on the ground. His companion, Elfriede Elias, returned to tell members of an international patrol—consisting of military police of all four occupation powers—how the soldier was shot.

While she was giving her story Reed said, a detachment of Russian guards surrounded her and the patrol. The patrol stood by helpless while Reed and several other Americans attempted to halt the Russians. They were warded off by bayonet parrying, however, he said.

The provost marshall's office said the girl then was whisked off and that as far as is known she still is being held.

Girl Whisked Off

Hurless said Grunden and two of his army buddies were walking with three Austrian girls along a paved parkway in the middle of Ringstrasse in front of the Russian Grand Hotel in the international sector of the city shortly after midnight when the incident occurred.

A Russian soldier "barged" out the hotel entrance and accosted the group, Hurless said. He quoted one of the Austrian girls as saying the Russian told the Americans that they should "get off the pavement and into the gutter where you belong."

The Russian then pushed one of the Americans, and he pushed back, Hurless said.

Russians Open Fire

The Russian then called for help, he added. A guard stationed permanently at the hotel entrance rushed across the street, knocked the American down with his gun butt and then shot him through the back as he lay on the sidewalk, he said.

Another shot was fired, Hurless said, and the other two Americans fled. The Russian guard fired three more shots in their direction without scoring a hit, he charged.

The two Americans ran to the American-occupied Bristol Hotel and reported the incident to military police.

Hurless said it took about 45 minutes to bring an ambulance to the scene. During the interval, he charged, "Not a single Russian made a move to assist the wounded soldier."

The Russian bullet passed through the soldier's back, out his side and into his arm, seriously injuring the nerves, Hurless said.

Congress Told Chinese Need Military Aid

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

UNRRA's director general and a former American Ambassador to China told Congress yesterday that further economic assistance to the Chinese will be wasted until the military situation there is settled.

Lowell W. Rooks, a retired major general and chief of the soon-to-be-liquidated UNRRA, urged that the United States give Chiang Kai-shek's government military aid along with economic help to enable it to defeat the Communists.

Clarence E. Gauss, one-time Ambassador to China and a veteran of 30 years in the Far East with the American foreign service, gave the House Foreign Affairs Committee about the same advice.

Military Program Urged

He said that "a sound military program" must be started in China to end the civil war or economic aid would be "Operation Rathole." Indicating that he would favor American military aid, if Chiang asked for it, Gauss avoided a direct recommendation to this effect.

"However, we should go into it with our eyes open," he said, "A military aid program, if we go into it, will be a long one, covering many years and costing a vast amount of money."

The committee is considering an Administration bill calling for 570 millions in purely non-military aid for China. Secretary of State George C. Marshall has indicated he is opposed to a large military assistance plan.

Meanwhile, Claire Chennault, former head of the Flying Tigers and a wartime American Air Force major general, arrived here from China to testify in support of military aid for Chiang Kai-shek's government. Accompanying him was his young Chinese wife.

Chennault, who now operates an airline in China, will testify before the committee tomorrow morning at an open session in the Caucus Room of the House Office Building.

Maj. Gen. G. E. Edgerton, USA, former chief of the UNRRA's China office, also testified on the China relief program. He supported the economic relief program, but did not commit himself on military aid.

Representative Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) asked Edgerton if it is possible to give military aid to China "without having ultimately to send over American divisions." The Army officer said he would not like to answer that question in open session.

Vandenberg's ERP Triumphs

Martin and Chairman Charles A. Easton of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The Secretary was troubled by the imminence of the Italian elections on April 18 and by the slow pace of the ERP through the House.

Speaker Matrin told reporters later that he haped for House passage by April 10. He thought House actoin would be speeded, rather than delayed, if aid to China were included in one foreign aid bill.

Vandenberg, however, has not been enthusiastic for combining the foreign aid programs, and has expressed the hope that ERP might pass both houses by April 1, when existing foreign relief funds expire.

The Senate, at least, put on a show of speed yesterday after five days of inconclusive debate. It not only rejected the Ball-Wherry amendment, but adopted two others with Vandenberg's consent.

One, by Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) directed the administrator of ERP "to assure, so far as is practicable, that at least 50 per cent of the gross tonnage of commodities procured within the United States . . . is transported in United States flag vessels to the extent that such vessels are available at market rates."

This was intended to satisfy shipping and maritime union interests but at the same time leave plenty of discretion to the administrator. Vandenberg accepted it without question after Knowland had modified an earlier and stricter version.

The other amendment adopted, also by Knowland, provided for stopping exports of any commodity to a nonparticipating European country—that is, to Russia or her satellites—if the administrator found that supplies of such commodity would otherwise be too small to meet the needs of the participating countries.

This, too, helped meet the widespread congressional fear of helping the Soviet bloc and yet left plenty of leeway to the administrator. It would permit the continuance of exports to the Soviet Union, for example, if they brought strategic minerals in return.

A fourth amendment, by Senator J. William Fulbright (D., Ark.) was "reluctantly" withdrawn by its author yesterday because of Vandenberg's opposition.

Fulbright had proposed that the "political unification" of Europe be mentioned in the bill as one of the goals of American policy.

He said he would withdraw it on the understanding that the Foreign Relations Committee would hold hearings later in the Spring on a joint resolution of Congress for a "United States of Europe."

He expressed the hope that the ERP debate would strengthen the determination of Europeans to unite. Unless the 16 western European nations achieve political unification within a few years, he warned, communism would triumph and ERP would become nothing but "a tremendous subsidy" to Communist power.

Vandenberg, from his President's chair, and Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.), thanked Fulbright for withdrawing his amendment.

"If there is to be a western association of the European nations it must come from their own initiative and their own acts," Connally said. "To put the idea into this bill might injure the objective. But we all share the view that we would like the nations of western Europe to form a tighter organization to resist the encroachments of totalitarianism."

At the start of yesterday's debate ERP won a convert in Senator Kenneth McKellar, ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee. McKellar said he originally intended to vote against ERP, but the Communist seizure of power in Czechoslovakia helped to change his mind.

Now he saw Russia "determined to take over Europe and turn it over to communism if it is humanly possible."

"We should give Russia notice," said McKellar, "that if she undertakes to take over any more European territory we are at the service of those nations, and will help them maintain their individuality and independence."

Senator William Langer of North Dakota, who voted against the United Nations Charter, delivered an impassioned attack on ERP before the Senate adjourned. Today another all-out attack is expected from Senator Glen Taylor (D., Idaho), who will bring the ideas of Henry A. Wallace into the debate for the first time.

Taylor introduced a substitute bill yesterday to put the entire task of European reconstruction into the hands of the United Nations, with an initial contribution of five billion dollars from the United States.

U. S. Plans Other Foreign Aid

By The Associated Press

The State Department announced yesterday it will ask Congress soon to let the Export-Import Bank lend 500 million dollars to Latin American countries.

The department also told the House Foreign Affairs Committee it plans to request 20 million dollars "to prevent disease and unrest" in the American-British zone in Trieste during the 15-month period between April 1, 1948 and June 30, 1949.

The committee had asked what foreign aid programs were intended other than the European aid and China aid plans already proposed. The department listed these "estimated authorizations and appropriations to be requested:"

1. An economic rehabilitation appropriation for Japan, Korea and the Ryukyu Islands. The Army is developing the plan, the department said, and the amount "has not yet been finally determined."
2. Authority to extend financial aid to the Trieste zone.
3. The loan authorization for Latin America. The only congressional action needed is an extension of the Export-Import Bank's present lending authority.
4. A $65,000,000 interest - free loan for the construction of United Nations headquarters. This is to be arranged by an agreement between the United States and the U. N. The loan would be repaid in 30 years.
5. Inter-American military cooperation. The Department said no figures are available yet on how much will be asked to put into effect cooperation plans outlined in legislation already before the House.

Does Stomach Gas and Bloat Make You Feel Miserable?
If so, here is how you may get blessed relief in freeing your stomach from this nervous distress. It works this way:
Everytime food enters the stomach a vital gastric juice must flow normally to break-up certain food particles; else the food may ferment. Sour food, acid indigestion and gas frequently cause a morbid, touchy, fretful, peevish, nervous condition, loss of appetite, underweight, restless sleep, weakness.
To get real relief you must increase the flow of this vital gastric juice. Medical authorities, in independent laboratory tests on human stomachs, have by positive proof shown that SSS Tonic is amazingly effective in increasing this flow when it is too little or scanty due to a non-organic stomach disturbance. This is due to the SSS Tonic formula which contains special and potent activating ingredients.
Also, SSS Tonic helps build-up non-organic, weak, watery blood in nutritional anemia—so with a good flow of this gastric digestive juice, plus rich red blood you should eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better.
Avoid punishing yourself with overdoses of soda and other alkalizers to counteract gas and bloating when what you so dearly need is SSS Tonic to help you digest food for body strength and repair. Don't wait! Join the host of happy people SSS Tonic has helped. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle of SSS Tonic from your drug store today. SSS Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

Haganah, Irgun In Joint Attacks

On Palestine

Britain, Lie Asked to Join In Parleys

Assaults on Arabs Follow Agreement To Combine Forces

Jerusalem, March 8 (AP).—Haganah, the Jewish agency's militia, and Irgun Zvai Leumi, Jewish underground fighting force, made attacks today upon the Arabs, Jewish sources said.

It was the first report of action by both groups since the disclosure yesterday that they had agreed to consolidate their forces in a common front against the Arabs. The Jewish agency meets tomorrow to consider ratification of the Irgun-Haganah pact.

The Jewish informants said the Irgun fighters attacked Arabs in a village 10 miles east of Natanya. A number of Arabs were reported wounded and six houses wrecked.

The Haganah force blew up an Arab house near Beth Dajan, in the Tel Aviv-Jaffa area. The informants said the house and an adjoining orange grove were used by Arab snipers.

In Palestine one Jew and four Arabs were killed in scattered incidents. The unofficial death toll since the U. N. decision on partition reached 1630.

In Haifa, Jewish and Egyptian passengers clashed aboard the steamer Cyrenia as she docked. Jewish sources said three Jews were injured.

New York, March 8 (U.P.).—The United States, Russia, France and China, opening intensive talks on the U. N.'s Palestine dilemma, today asked Great Britain and U. N. Secretary General Trygve Lie to sit in.

Meeting informally for an hour and 15 minutes in the Russian delegation's newly-acquired Park Avenue mansion, the four powers seemed agreed that their emergency talk would have the widest possible range, including the question of whether Holy Land fighting is a threat to peace.

But first, the four powers had to get organized, and they agreed quickly to bring in British representatives, at least to supply information.

Britain had announced it would boycott the talks except to furnish on request up-to-date reports on the situation in Palestine.

It was expected, however, that Russia and the United States would try to persuade Britain to share responsibility for any Big Power decision on what to do next about the faltering U. N. program to split the Holy Land.

Lie, who has warned the U. N.'s prestige would tumble if it failed to solve the Palestine riddle announced promptly that he would accept the invitation.

The four delegates who met today, Warren Austin of the United States, Andrei Gromyko of Russia, Alexandre Parodi of France and T. F. Tsiang of China, planned to hold their second meeting late tomorrow following a Security Council session on Trieste.

Correction

In a story on the meeting of the Prince Georges Civic Federation on Friday, The Washington Post erroneously stated that Gregory Hankin, attorney, appeared before the group. A statement by Mr. Hankin was included in a report presented at the meeting which involved discussion of raising funds to fight proposed transit fare boosts. The Washington Post regrets the error.

Britain to Oppose Palestine Militia

Lake Success, March 8 (AP).—Britain advised the United Nations today that she would not permit formation of a Jewish or Arab militia in Palestine before British rule ends.

The U. N. Palestine Commission had asked Britain, as mandatory power, for permission to start organization of the two militias as provided for in the U. N. partition project. The militias would be used by the projected Jewish and Araba nations.

Labor Party Revolt On Palestine Weakens

London, March 8 (U.P.). — Nine members of the Labor Party in Commons rebelled today against the government's refusal to help the United Nations carry out the partition of Palestine.

But the revolt showed signs of collapse tonight. Some of the rebels got worried over the determination of the leaders to amend a government bill which would provide legal means to end the British Palestine mandate May 15.

Leader Claims Arabs' Army Tops Jewish

Damascus, Syria, March 8 (U.P.).—Ahmed Sharabaty, Syrian minister of defense, said today that the Arab army is so much stronger than Jewish forces in Palestine, volunteers are being turned away by the thousands.

Sharabaty, a key member of the Arab League's military committee, said the Arabs will use more men and better arms than the Jews in the battle for Palestine.

"We have taken the maximum figure concerning the Jewish forces and topped this by several thousands," he said in an interview. "The Jews claim they have 70,000 trained fighters. We know this is a myth, but we accepted this number and then built up an army exceeding this figure."

Arab volunteers from "every Arab country" have entered Palestine, he claimed. "There have been so many we have turned back thousands," he added.

As soon as the British army withdraws from Palestine, he added, the "big fight" will start.

Hebrew Aid Headquarters Move to Paris

The Hebrew Committee of National Liberation announced yesterday it is moving its headquarters from 2315 Massachusetts ave. nw., to Paris because, for one thing, American-Hebrew relations have "deteriorated."

Chairman Peter H. Bergson also announced he will be succeeded as of today by Samuel Merlin, who has been the committee's secretary general. Bergson, chairman since the committee's inception in May, 1944, will devote himself to "the conduct of Hebrew foreign relations," the committee said.

New Teachers Status Urged

Recommendations for advancement of the professional status of teachers are included in the annual report of the National Education Association, released yesterday.

Pointing out that a million new teachers will be needed to staff the nation's schools in the next ten years, the report declares that only colleges and universities placing primary emphasis on professional education should undertake to prepare teachers; and that higher than average entrance standards should be demanded for teacher-preparation courses.

Encouraging the giving of scholarships by civic and other public organizations, the report states periodic leaves of absence should be granted to teachers for programs of professional improvement. Specific protections asked include retirement systems, a salary base of $2400 scaling up with experience to $6000, and adequate tenure laws to prevent unjust dismissals.

On a classroom basis, the NEA believes that 25 pupils should be the maximum number enrolled in any class or grade taught by one teacher of academic subjects, and that no teacher in secondary or departmentalized schools should have a daily pupil load of more than 100.

On political issues, the report states that freedom of the student to learn "may be denied students in schools where the teacher, through fear of reprisals, refrains from classroom discussion of controversial issues to which some prejudiced persons of the community may object.

"These are troubled times. Ideals proved by experience are challenged. Support is sought for theories that are dangerous or of doubtful value. Students in schools which firmly close their doors against the clamor of voices are denied the opportunity to formulate criteria of appraisal, and become the victims of chaos. The public should zealously guard the right of the teacher to teach, the right of the student to learn."

Are Real Estate Prices Too High?

. . . or has the value of the dollar decreased?

REAL ESTATE prices are not as high as some people think they are. Regarded in terms of the purchasing power of the dollar, real estate is one of the best "buys" on the market today.

You can probably cite a dozen examples of commodity prices that have doubled or tripled in the past decade. In considering the price of real estate, it is advisable to keep in mind this fact: You're buying it with a unit of value whose worth in 1947 was 36.8% less than it was in 1940.

The chart above, based upon statistics compiled by Ray Wenzlick & Co., publishers of the Analyst Reports, reveals the decline in purchasing power* of the dollar since 1850. We believe it to be of great interest to all who contemplate the purchase of real estate.

 The purchasing power of the dollar is computed for goods and services by taking the reciprocal of the cost of living with 1850 equaling 100. New Court Building

The judges and officials, local and Federal, who have been working out plans for the financing of the Federal Courts Building here are to be congratulated on the formula finally accepted. Both the Federal Government and the local community have a vital interest in the erection of a suitable home for the courts. It was long ago agreed that each should bear 50 per cent of the cost. The chief difficulty arose over the impracticability of taking the District's share out of any one or even several local appropriations bills. Now that problem has been solved, however, by an agreement to spread the District's contribution over a period of 25 years. If Congress approves this sensible arrangement, construction of the building can go forward without interference with other pressing District improvements.

No one who has business with the Federal courts in Washington can doubt the need for the new building. So cramped is the Federal District Court that trials often have to be postponed for want of space in which to hear them. The accommodations for juries are so inadequate as to be a constant embarrassment and source of anxiety to the judges. Justice cannot be administered at its best under these circumstances. We hope that Congress, which has already voted funds for planning the building, will now provide for the actual construction without further delay.

If We Want Peace

When George Washington wrote, "To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means to preserve peace," he was merely expressing a truism. One of the most fundamental lessons of history is that strong words and righteous protests mean little without the force to back them up. Our lack of effective force today undoubtedly is a prime source of our difficulties with Russia. The rapid correction of this deficiency is the basic point of emphasis in the various surveys of the military establishment, including the presidential and congressional air policy studies.

Quite properly most of these surveys have stressed the need for a vast increase in air power as the first line of defense. And yet it is a little disconcerting to observe the tendency in some quarters to view more planes—an "umbrella of air power," as one legislator called it—as an answer in itself. For there is as much danger in making air power a sort of Maginot Line as there is in failing to appreciate its significance. Air power has its limitations just as has the prospect of push-button warfare which Admiral Nimitz effectively scotched the other day. Nor is the atomic bomb in itself a complete weapon; we still must have means of delivering it. The point is that just as security cannot be absolute, neither does it come in a single package. It is not that easy.

Perhaps the chief error in relying solely upon the air power theory is that this may work to the exclusion of other necessary security measures. For the development of adequate air power takes time, and what is needed now above all else is means to augment our strength and influence as quickly as possible. Moreover, what kind of air power are we to have? Long-range bombers and guided missiles, for example, still lack practical utility in defense of the United States. Without an over-all plan—a Joint Chiefs of Staff deficiency which has been sharply criticized—it is hardly possible to assay all components of defense in their proper significance, or to know what items of air power to stress, or, actually, to know whether we are getting our money's worth.

Universal military training is one of the other measures necessary to strengthen our hand. Yet even UMT, like more air power, would take time to bring into full operation. It is predicated on the assumption that we have several years to prepare. But now is when military strength could be most effective, for undoubtedly the international Communists, in their westward march, are counting heavily on the knowledge that the United States has only two Army combat divisions ready for deployment. Specifically it is Italy and France and the prospective western European defense union that American armed strength should guarantee. This raises the question of whether it might not be better to forgo UMT in favor of some form of Selective Service designed to build up our armed forces rapidly, with a concurrent emphasis on reserve and home guard training. For it is trained manpower that the Russians respect and that is the sine qua non of military effectiveness.

There is no certainty, to be sure, that any move we could make to strengthen our armed forces immediately would preserve the precarious peace. But in all likelihood the crisis in western Europe will occur in a matter of weeks rather than years, i.e., in Italy. Certainly we must have a great expansion of air power; but what we need most of all is a surcease of talk and the start of action to augment our strength—action directed along the lines that will do the most good in buttressing the resistance of western Europe. To give Russia the clear understanding that we mean business and that our words are backed by force would be the most effective deterrent to aggression we could offer.

Turning On The Light

No. XII.

This series is ended with the following summary and will be reprinted shortly in booklet form.

In the series of editorials under this heading we have tried to indicate how the congressional investigation can be made a more useful and less dangerous instrument of democracy. Our research has indicated that only Congress can reform its own investigations and that no drastic or radical changes are essential. We have urged Congress to enact a code of fair procedure and to require its committees to abide by the code, but every point we have suggested for inclusion within the code has been drawn from the actual practice of successful investigating committees of the comparatively recent past.

The chief aims to be sought, in our opinion, are maximum enlightenment of Congress and the people on every issue of public concern that Congress is disposed to inquire into and protection of the rights of individuals against unreasonable and undemocratic encroachments. We do not think these aims are incompatible. Both can be and have been achieved by men who combine expert investigative methods with a sense of fairness and democratic purpose. To achieve these aims we think Congress should lay down a code of rules including the following points:

1. Investigations should be conducted by groups within the regular standing committees of the House or Senate and not by special committees.

2. No legislator who is an interested party or who is in a position to shake down potential witnesses should be permitted to serve as head of an investigating subcommittee.

3. Investigations should be confined to important matters of public concern, as distinguished from party interests, and should be conducted in a nonpartisan manner.

4. Investigations should be conducted in the open, the committee relying upon expert staff members to screen out prospective witnesses whose testimony is irrelevant.

5. Every witness should be guaranteed the right to put questions (within appropriate limits under control by the committee) to any other witness who has reflected on his reputation.

6. At the conclusion of his examination a witness should have the right to state his views briefly, or submit a statement for the record. The right of submitting a statement for the record should also be extended to persons who have been the subject of adverse comment who are not called as witnesses.

7. Attorneys for witnesses should be permitted to be present, and the witness should have the right to obtain a stenographic copy of his testimony at cost.

8. Recalcitrant witnesses should be cited for contempt only by majority vote of the Senate or the House.

9. No witness should be cited for contempt of Congress for refusal to answer questions as to his religious or political beliefs.

10. Every investigating committee should be supplied with expert counsel and staff investigators especially trained in the art of fact-finding by democratic methods.

Application of any code of fair procedure would, of course, depend upon the investigating committees themselves and the leadership of the Congress of which they are a part. But at least such a code, prescribed by legislation, would give the members of Congress as well as the public a yardstick by which to measure the performance of every investigating committee. That is the democratic way. We do not see how a Congress that has provided a code of procedure for administrative agencies can longer resist the enactment of a code designed to assure fairness on the part of its own investigators.

Getting America Across

Of all the efforts to get the American story before people of other countries, especially those behind the iron curtain, one of the least touted and most significant is the magazine America. Fifty thousand copies of this skillfully edited State Department publication are distributed each month in the Soviet Union. Observers tell of seeing copies in virtually every part of the country. Ancient, dog-eared issues are at a premium on railroad trains and sometimes single pages are to be found on the black market for more than the original sale price. There is little doubt that the magazine is grabbed up avidly by Soviet readers denied contact with the West, and while the ultimate audience cannot be gauged accurately, estimates run as high as one million.

Part of America's value lies in the fact that it does not attempt to answer Moscow's criticisms of the United States directly. Instead it concentrates on presenting an accurate picture of American institutions, including those which Soviet propaganda has attacked, with the objective of implanting doubts. For example, the Russian claim that medical care is available only to the rich in the United States is effectively countered by a feature on medical clinics. Likewise, the favorite Kremlin propaganda line about a forthcoming capitalist depression is answered by a comprehensive article, not sugar-coated, but giving the essential facts about the American economy. A typical issue of America contains articles and pictures on such subjects as the operations of a mail order house replete with photographs to impress goods-starved Russians, the life of a country doctor, scientific advances in many fields, agriculture in the Midwest, work of American artists, new recorded music and the like.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature about America is that it is conducted by an editorial staff of 20 on an annual budget of approximately half a million dollars, most of which is recovered through sales in Russia. There are many difficulties in the process, including the facts that the magazine must be written in English, sent to the Embassy in Moscow for translation, printed in New York, and then dispatched in Russian ships for distribution by the Soviet government. Nevertheless, there is evidence that the Russians are punctilious about living up to their agreement to distribute America, no doubt as a quid pro quo for the Information Bulletin which the Soviet Embassy circulates here.

In its report on the foreign information program, the joint congressional committee which made an on-the-spot investigation has recommended that America also be sent to other countries where the United States is concentrating its information efforts—a suggestion in which we concur strongly. While this idea is not a substitute for other aspects of the information program, certainly it is a capital asset in the campaign to get across the truth.

Subversive Lists

The Attorney General will soon issue a new list of subversive organizations based, according to Jerry Kluttz, on the research efforts of a 33-man staff in the Justice Department's Criminal Division. No doubt this staff will do its work astutely, and the Attorney General's second index expurgatorius will be compiled as conscientiously as his first. Nevertheless it will violate every concept of fair play and due process. The executive order under which the Attorney General will act prescribes no administrative procedure—not even the holding of hearings or the granting of an appeal—and sets no substantive standards for his guidance. Insofar as Mr. Clark avoids arbitrary and capricious decisions, it will be because of his own good will and common sense. His authority under the executive order is absolute.

This is a degree and kind of authority with which no official ought to be vested in a free society. It could be used to stigmatize as subversive any group with the aim of which the Attorney General happened to disagree—with Henry Wallace's third party, for example, if such action happened to seem politically expedient—or even a voluntary association of citizens joined to petition for a redress of their grievances. And indeed the very threat that it may be so used serves imponderably to restrain and coerce the free functioning of organizations dissenting from governmental policy or opposing official action in any way. Thus criticism, which is the lifeblood of the democratic process, is congealed at its source.

John Lord O'Brian, in the magnificent address to the New York State Bar Association which The Washington Post recently reproduced, analyzed the subtle intimidation to which individuals in the employ of the Federal Government are subject as a result of the loyalty program. His words apply with equal force to the effect upon organizations:

> What anxieties of mind, what prolonged periods of worry, what restraint upon their initiative, will result from their knowledge that their private lives are being secretly investigated, no one can say. But neither can anyone assert that this shadow upon their activities, however intangible and subtle, will not act as a constraint upon their freedom and their sense of independence. Apparently we have departed a long way from the admonition to beware of treading too closely upon the borders of freedom of conscience.

What groups will dare to oppose the Government if opposition stands in danger of being designated disloyal? What individuals will have the hardihood to join such groups if membership in them may be held to constitute a disqualification for public office? There is a distressing similarity here to the totalitarian practice of affording every citizen an untrammeled opportunity to vote for the party in power.

ISLAND INTERVAL

(Caribbean)

A sea-touched house where small crabs come to explore, dribble sand, churn sideways, try to turn,
get lost and cruise across the patio floor, (two claws to pull, two shoving the blunt stern . . .
can those be legs? They must have more than four!)
Now they devise adventure following cracks between the tiles: now one is in the lead and tilted like a little schooner, tacks, strung on the sunlight like a lacquer bead.
They do not need the sky and all that blue.
Let's pretend there's nothing else to do but count the copper freckles on their backs.

To rest, diminished so, worn out with wonder, to put on momentary shadow under a bougainvillea leaf, let the sea loom until it topples and spills but feel at home remembering towers of delphinium, to hush the questions, know the heart secure,
this is to make a peace in miniature:
time to draw quiet breath, to overhear and learn the snow-and-sapphire idiom of traveled waves conversing on the shore.
The storm gone by, they have forgotten fear, and tell of journeys they have made before, unrolling silken leagues from Labrador.

"Antilynching Bill"

Your March 2 editorial on antilynching was like a calm voice speaking through bedlam. I particularly liked your reminder that the effect of antilynch legislation is "to arouse nimosities at a time when there is urgent need for national unity." This is distressingly true.

It is heartening to see you take the position that certain complicated local problems can best be met through action of local authorities. This is painfully apparent in the case of the issues involved in the President's so-called civil-rights program.

The national press frequently intimates that opposition to the civil-rights proposals is led by the demagogue and the rabble-rouser. But demogogery is always loudest at election time, or when political capital can be made from harping on issues that run deep. The large body of enlightened Southerners whose steady unsung efforts have made possible the enormous progress made in race relations in the South is sorely disheartened by the implications of the President's civil-rights proposals. Our job is made much harder at a time when, as you say, we are making real progress and when the Nation needs all our energies to present a united front.

It should be pointed out that in the South as elsewhere authorities of the law usually carry out their charge as well as they can. In numerous instances they have, by a high sense of duty and sheer moral strength, averted trouble.

Race relatoins in the South pose a problem which is exceedingly intricate and far reaching. To understand it requires first-hand study over a considerable period. It is a problem which must be lived with. It must be approached with infinite patience and tolerance and a broad understanding of the historical implications. To make political sport, as some would do, of issues which form the very fabric of life in many States and which affect the day-to-day living of millions of our people, is to strike a blow below the belt indeed. Such action deals a body blow to the accomplishments of generations in the field of race relations.

This is a sad day for the courageous, high-minded men and women in the South who are working against odds, but persevering toward the solution of one of the most challenging problems a people were ever called upon to meet.

"Little Marshall Plan"

Miss Vivian Marshall and the second and third grades of the Mount Rainier Elementary School have asked me to thank you for the wonderful publicity you gave their "Little Marshall Plan"—the adoption of the little war-ravaged French village, Bohars.

Your readers may be interested to know that 47 bundles and 122 boxes of clothing and 78 boxes of food were shipped to the American Aid for France in New York. This organization will repack this material for overseas shipment and will see that it gets to Bohars.

After paying shipping charges to New York, "Bo" (the very hungry piggy bank) still had about $185 left over. This money is to be used to purchase additional needed food in New York. This will be bought at wholesale and will save trucking costs from here.

In addition to the above aid, the youngsters sent an individual Christmas-wrapped package to each person in Bohars. About 20 families were adopted by families in this community. Also, the French class of the high school in Clear Spring, Md., hearing of the project, sent individual packages to all the 17-year-olds in Bohars.

Numerous persons seeing items in the papers or hearing of it on the air, sent in contributions of money, food, pencils, clothing, candles—and anything else they could spare. Merchants gave clothing for children, and money. Residents of Hagerstown, Md., sent a large contribution of clothing. It is the great hope of the second and third graders that other schools throughout the country will borrow their idea and adopt other war-torn villages in Europe. READER.

Czech Submission

In your issue of February 29 was a picture of Benes and Gottwald, and over it a caption, "Benes Approves." I think this caption is very misleading. "Benes Accepts" would have been more truthful and understanding.

I have been bragging about The Washington Post as the finest paper in the U. S. A.—but you are letting me down. The editorial of February 27, "Reflections on Prague," contains this statement:

"They (the Czechs) are good at sabotage and underground activity, but, unlike the Poles and Hungarians, who are heirs to an age of chivalry, they have contracted a habit of acceptance of the inevitable."

Your editorial writer might profit by reading some Bohemian history, and should be reminded of the dramatic story of the Czechoslovak legionnaires during World War I. Here is a tale of romance and chivalry—these were gallant fighting men—and thousands were shot as they tried to join the Allied armies on all fronts. If the Czechoslovaks had accepted the inevitable they would still be a downtrodden minority in an Austro-Hungarian Empire.

Freedom For All

The political whirlwind now raging in Dixie seems to stem from so many different angles that, perhaps, the services of an expert, to which I lay no claim, might be required to survey them all. Whatever may be our urge, let us not hasten to be too critical of the actions of the political leaders of the South, even if emotional stress for the moment seems to have supplanted a more profound logical analysis of the principle involved in the so-called Bill of Rights.

We might well remember that the South is not the only section of this country suffering from a lack of application of democratic processes. Civil rights measures (equality to all in every way before the law) should apply in every section of America, if it is to come into world courts with unsoiled hands. Peoples of other lands are not blind to theoretically pious claims on the one hand, while on the other, the practical application of biased measures is being directed toward minorities.

A national self-reexamination for America seems indicated: A subjective analysis of one's philosophy of life seems just as essential to growth and progres as is objective shadow-boxing for hindrance, real or imaginary.

Let us all, with due appreciation for all sections of the common country, look forward to, and welcome the approach of the day, when the political leaders not only of the South, but the entire country, for that matter, will recognize the fact that restrictive measures aimed at any group of citizens, must inevitably retard the progress of the whole population. Not until then, can we fully realize that freedom is for all or for none.

Population Forecast

Will The Washington Post please inform the two gentlemen who have been debating future population trends in your column (Guy Irving Burch, February 21, and C. H. Seybold, February 28) that if they will be patient for another few days they will be provided with new facts upon which to continue their argument.

The Census Bureau will issue on Monday, March 15, a new forecast of the population of the United States by age groups, color, sex, and other factors, all projected forward to 1975 and with some of the tables carrying as far forward as the year 2000. This 150-page book containing all of the implications affecting industry, schools, hospitals, social security and other activities, is being published by the Government Printing Office and your correspondents may get it by sending 45 cents to the Government Printing Office. But they had better hurry because the first issue of 5000 copies is already gone and there will be a little delay in getting in on the second press run of 5000 copies.

This new forecast is the work of P. K. Whelpton of the Scripps Foundation for Population Research and Drs. Hope Tisdale Eldridge and Jacob S. Siegel of the Census Bureau.

Alien Enlistments

I saw a report in your issue of February 29 that Senator Lodge is author of a measure to allow the enlistment of 50,000 aliens in the Regular Army. They would not be in a separate organization (foreign legion), he said, but would be scattered throughout Army units. "Enlistment of aliens would overcome recruiting difficulties of the Army and make it unnecessary to send 18-year-old boys for occupation duties."

Though far short of its required manpower strength the Army has been discouraging the enlistment of Negroes. Contrary to Senator Lodge's plan for aliens, the native-born Negroes are put in separate units and restricted to the most menial work as a general thing.

It seems that any alien is given the glad hand, the keys to the country and integrated into national affairs, while American Negroes must be looked down upon with suspicion and kept in inferior positions of dubious opportunities.

"Wallace-Taylor"

It seems to me that if Lillian Clott will reexamine her letter of March 4 dealing with the question of Senator Taylor's foreign policy stand she may perhaps see that it is her own logic, and not that of The Washington Post, which is faulty.

Logical thinking, to my mind, would require the conclusion that the Senator's motivation, whatever it may be, is not germane to the determination of wheather his position on foreign policy does or does not serve Communist purposes. Possibly an analogy may clarify the matter.

Suppose, for example, that some man rushing his wife to a hospital in a car were to run down and kill a person holding a high position in the Department of State. The death of that official might greatly further the Communist program (or it might not in that particular instance). Clearly, however, the driver's motives for speeding would have no bearing on the effects of his action. Equally clearly, I think, the reasons behind Senator Taylor's position on foreign policy have no relevance to the question whether or not that position helps the Communists.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Democratic Break-Up?

WE MAY well be watching, without thus far having caught its true meaning, the liquidation of one of the two major political parties. What is happening in Democratic ranks is more than a temporary break between the two poles of the party in the North and in the South.

It is more than the accident of a Presidential candidate with whom various groups are dissatisfied. Mr. Truman is not the cause of the crack-up. He merely happens to find himself at the climactic moment when bitterly contending forces are seen to be irreconcilable.

What is happening in the South is obvious. What is happening in the North is not quite so clear, but it is just as significant of the revolution that is taking place.

Last week I spent two days in Detroit and I talked with a good many people who are directly or indirectly in politics. Even a glimpse of the pattern of change in that great key industrial center seemed to me to reveal the kind of splitting-off that can mean the end of the Democratic Party as we have known it in recent decades.

It is not that Michigan will almost certainly go Republican this fall. After all, Wendell Willkie carried that State by a narrow margin in 1940 and Franklin Roosevelt took it in '44 by a margin almost as small. It is traditionally a Republican State.

THE NEW and striking factor is the direction in which the labor vote in the industrial centers is moving. These voters are going down a road that leads away from the Democratic Party.

For a variety of reasons, Henry Wallace's third party seems likely to poll a substantial vote in November in Detroit and in the other automobile cities. One reason is the large number of Negroes particularly in Detroit, with an acute new consciousness of injustice and discrimination and a militant new political awareness.

Walter Reuther, who is now solidifying his remarkable victory over the Communist faction in the United Auto Workers, is dead set against Wallace. The UAW executive board last week denounced Wallace's candidacy as a "Communist Party maneuver to advance the foreign policy interest of Soviet Russia."

But the same resolution called for the formation of a new "Progressive" party after the 1948 elections. An invitation was extended to CIO, AFL, the Railroad Brotherhood, farm and white-collar groups to join in creating a new party. Reuther has several times recently pronounced a plague on both the old parties, plainly hinting his desire to see a third party started that would be free of the Communist taint.

IT TAKES no great political genius to see where this leads if it continues. The Wallace party, if only because it is a convenient front for the Communists, is certain to remain in being after '48. That is one splinter party.

A Reuther party built around the non-Communist labor-left would be another. So would the remnants of the old Democratic Party. With the South pulling out, still another party would be created—a Southern splinter dominant in the poll-tax States. So far as national elections are concerned, these splinters would break against the solid mass of the Republican Party. That realization is deeply disturbing to some who feel that the third-party road is a dead end.

They urge as an alternative the necessity for new forces to take over and rejuvenate and revivify the Democratic Party. They argue that new parties in this country have always come into being by building on the foundations of the old; while third parties have sprung up, flourished briefly and then withered away.

From 1932 through 1944, the scrambled elements of the Democratic Party were held together by the political genius of President Roosevelt and the idea of the New Deal. Even when he attempted a "purge" of Southern reactionaries, as he did in 1938, he carried the South along with him. In the same way he carried the great urban centers, where labor-left voters returned the scorn and distrust of the Southern bourbons a hundredfold.

Those who argue that the Democratic Party should be refashioned in a new form point to the Roosevelt heritage. On the foundation, they insist, a new beginning can be made. They believe that even in the South, as industrialization increases there, a new Democratic Party will evolve, with genuine ties with the North. This is the kind of debate which will be heard increasingly as the tide of change cuts deep into the Democratic Party of tradition.

Time For UMT

To quote the oft-quoted Walrus, "The time has come . . ." but not for talk. With the Czechs' head in the basket and the next move known only to Joe, it's time for us to stop piddling and start acting. Having done one horrible hitch in the Navy, I don't relish any more of the same. But if we didn't finish that job—we can't sit back and contemplate the increasing chaos; we've got to roll up our sleeves again and get to work. This brings up that frightening phrase, universal military training. Like so many, I don't like it and wish I could forget it. Unfortunately, to forget it may prove fatal.

Can't our mighty statesmen see the folly of procrastinating till after their jobs are resecured? If we don't speak strongly and back up our words with strong forces now, it could conceivably be our fate to remain silent for generations to come. Do you want to take that chance? I don't!

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Election
Vandenberg—The Vice Presidency

THE ARGUMENT of the previous articles was that while the Truman Administration might become so weak that even Taft could win, the Republican Party cannot become firmly united for an effective administration of the Government except by organizing around Dewey and Vandenberg.

Lippmann

They represent the postwar position. Under Taft, who represents the prewar position, the party would remain fundamentally disunited. It would be an uneasy coalition of disagreeing elements, unable to move confidently on any definite line of policy.

THE PRELIMINARY polls confirm what is common knowledge—that Governor Dewey does not attract general and spontaneous support. The Eisenhower, Stassen, and Vandenberg booms indicate that though Governor Dewey has all the objective specifications for the nomination—a proven record as a vote getter in New York and as an extraordinarily successful Governor, together with an acceptable position on domestic and foreign issues—a very large number of people are looking for something in the President which they feel that he lacks. Perhaps it is a certain generosity of the spirit, which is to be found in Eisenhower, Stassen and Vandenberg.

The missing quality in Dewey is imponderable. But if this quality were not missing, his nomination would be a foregone conclusion.

THERE IS no doubt that Vandenberg is now the man on whom the active candidates could most readily come together. Of no other man can it be said that there are so many Republicans who trust him, so few who are deeply opposed to him.

His choice would, however, present a special problem which, considering what is at stake in the next four years, needs to be faced calmly and frankly. Senator Vandenberg would be nearly 65 when he was inaugurated, and although his health is good, it is not so perfect but that it has to be taken into account.

What has to be taken into account particularly is the fact that executive office would be a new experience for Senator Vandenberg. Now the strains and stresses of the executive are quite different from those of the legislator, and in his case there is no way of telling how readily he could accommodate himself to them. It must be assumed that the strains and stresses would be greater for a man who takes executive office late in life than for a man used to them all his life.

The Senator has, I think, recognized something of the sort. Not long ago he told Mr. Marquis Childs that he would wish to be a one-term President if he were nominated and elected.

THE NOMINATION of Mr. Vandenberg would, therefore, make the choice of his running mate for Vice President a matter of the very highest importance. The question of his successor would be posed from the outset, and it could not again be overlooked as it was in 1944. We need consider no other eventuality except the one which Mr. Vandenberg put to Mr. Childs—that he would not wish to serve more than one term.

The fact that he was not a candidate for reelection would, of course, give him some of the advantages which he spoke of to Mr. Childs—"his appeal to the country would be stronger since it would be evident that continuing in power was not his chief objective." Not his personal objective. It would, however, be the objective of his party. And so during his one term the politics of choosing his successor would be ever present, and would affect profoundly his own capacity to lead and discipline his party.

THEREFORE, it seems to me, the choice of the Vice President on a Vandenberg ticket is a crucial consideration. It is crucially important not only in the event of his disability but because, unless the succession is settled at the outset, the problem of the succession would dominate his Administration.

If the Vice President were not a man qualified to be President in his own right—say a Dewey or a Stassen—and at the same time as fully committed, as they are, to following the line of policy on which Vandenberg would be elected, the Republicans in 1948 would run the risk of repeating the mistake which the Democrats made in 1944. The country would have no assurance of having the kind of Administration it thought it was electing.

Consistent Policy

By Sumner Welles

American Assurance Needed

TWO YEARS ago I wrote in this column on the virtues of dependability in foreign policy. Consistency in American policy can, however, no longer be regarded merely as a valuable asset. It has become an imperative necessity. It is futile for us to think that we can reach our objectives unless other nations are convinced that American policy is dependable.

Dependability in foreign policy is tantamount to good credit in the dealings between individuals. It means that others know with certainty that you are able and determined to live up to your announced commitments.

From the time the United States emerged as a great power it has never, except for brief periods, pursued a foreign policy that was consistent. It is for that reason, notwithstanding the transformation of the United States into the greatest power of the world, that this Nation's influence in world affairs has only rarely been commensurate with its resources and strength.

AT THE END of the First World War the United States, under Woodrow Wilson, enforced upon a reluctant Europe the most advanced form of international organization that had yet been conceived, and peace treaties which, with all of their defects, were more enlightened than they would otherwise have been.

Within 12 months the United States entirely changed its policy. It withdrew into isolation. By its withdrawal it destroyed the foundation that was indispensable if the European countries were to succeed with the new order they had been persuaded to adopt.

It is hardly surprising that skepticism was paramount in Europe when the United States once more undertook to assume world leadership at the end of the Second World War. It was only because leaders of both political parties in this country, outstanding among them Franklin Roosevelt and Arthur Vandenberg, forged a national, rather than a partisan, foreign policy, that the foreign disbelief in the reliability of the United States that had prevailed for a generation was gradually dispelled.

We are proposing to offer the nations of western and southern Europe the only means by which they can reconstruct their economies and gain renewed political, social and material strength. The assistance contemplated under the European recovery plan is indispensable if the Soviet Union is to be prevented from extending its control to the shores of the Atlantic.

But no thinking observer believes that economic assistance alone is going to be enough. What is equally essential is that the peoples of Great Britain, France and Italy, of the smaller European countries, and also of the republics of the Western Hemisphere, are sure that the announced policy of the United States will be carried out in every one of its implications, and that they will be supported by the United States in any effort they may make to resist Communist aggression.

THIS IS a time when an unequivocal declaration of intent upon our part, the armed force to back it up, and a foreign policy which is subject to no charge of vacillation, will be the surest way to keep the peace.

Yet at this very moment the United States, by its feeble and inconsistent course in the United Nations, has again shaken world confidence in the dependability of its policy. After having exerted all of its influence to get the United Nations Assembly to decide upon the partition of Palestine, the United States subsequently reversed itself and by its timid indecision has halted all action.

How can it be expected that such nations as the Scandinavian countries, directly exposed to Soviet pressure; Greece and Turkey, with Soviet armies at their gates; or Italy, about to pass through the most critical period of the postwar years, can have unquestioning confidence in the value of American assurances after such an example of disastrous inconsistency?

We fortunately have at this moment an exceptionally able and far-sighted Foreign Relations Committee in the Senate. The Senate, however, under our constitutional system, cannot direct policy. That is the responsibility of the Executive. Until the present Executive learns that, no matter how desirable the objectives of our foreign policy may be, the achievement of those objectives will be gravely impeded unless there is faith in the reliability of the United States, the conduct of this country's foreign policy will suffer from handicaps that may well prove to be fatal.

Repeal of Oleomargarine Tax Is Urged at House Hearing

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

A row between the dairy industry and oleomargarine producers, which, dates back to 1886, was renewed yesterday before the House Agriculture Committee.

For 62 years oleo has been subject to special taxes. Since 1902 these taxes have been a quarter of a cent a pound for uncolored oleo, and 10 cents a pound for colored oleo. In addition, many States also have high taxes on oleo.

So far this session 18 bills to repeal these taxes have been introduced.

Yesterday proponents of repeal, including Undersecretary of the Treasury A. Lee M. Wiggins, urged House action. Wiggins said "it is the Treasury's view that the Federal tax be repealed," and added that such action is favored by the Administration, including President Truman.

The battle between the two interests was carried direct to House Speaker Joseph W. Martin, jr. Saturday a big display, showing that not only margarine but butter and many other products are artificially colored before reaching the consumer, was erected in the New House Office Building lobby.

The exhibit, urging removal of the tax on coloring oleomargarine yellow caused Congressmen from dairy districts to see red. They demanded its removal, and now.

Representative August H. Andresen, from Minnesota's cow country, declared that if the exhibit was still theer today he was going to install a cow, a calf and a farmer's pink-cheeked daughter oppoisitte it. His exhibit, he said, would advertise the importance to humanity of what he called "man's foster-mother, the cow."

Andresen said the oleo show was "lobbying of the most supreme order." Other members from dairy districts joined him. Before the morning was half over, their anguished cries brought an order from Martin to get the display out. It violated, Martin said, a House rule against advertising.

Wiggins testified that the present taxes on oleo:

1. Distort the competitive position of two domestic industries, and penalize oleomargarine to aid butter.
2. Interfere with best use of national resources.
3. "Unnecessarily burden consumers far in excess of the amount paid in taxes."

The taxes are unimportant from a Federal revenue standpoint, Wiggins asserted, amounting to about seven million dollars a year.

LARGEST FINANCIAL INSTITUTION IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL

"I enclose you my note and a check on yourselves to meet the discount . . ."

John Tyler

In 1846, gentleman farmer JOHN TYLER arranged for a brief renewal of his note at Corcoran & Riggs, declaring that his harvest was "well nigh completed" and that he expected to be in a position to liquidate the loan at its next maturity.

The Nation's 10th Chief Executive had retired the year before to his beautiful estate on the James River, known as Sherwood Forest.

The same "pride of ownership" that Tyler felt as he supervised his broad acres is shared by thousands of Washington home-owners who have used the loaning facilities of The Riggs National Bank . . . for Real Estate Loans . . . for Financing Repairs and Improvements . . . for just plain "paying bills".

Today, as in Tyler's day, it is sound practice to "bank at RIGGS" and to "borrow at RIGGS".

Religious Classes Banned by Court

Root, agreed that the schools must never be given over to the use of any religious group.

Conviction Renewed

"We renew our conviction," Frankfurter said in closing, "that we have staked the very existence of our country on the faith that complete separation between the state and religion is best for the state and best for religion. If nowhere else, in the relation between church and state, 'good fences make good neighbors.'"

Justice Jackson gave an opinion concurring with the majority, but which had far more the tone of a dissent. Jackson said he joined in Frankfurter's opinion and he concurred in the judgment of the court, but that he doubted that the court had a right to pass on the Champaign case at all.

Favors Setting Limit

In any event, said Jackson, he felt the court ought to set a limit on "the demands for interference with local school boards" that it would act upon. And he wished to place his views on these limits on record because of the flood of law suits over the same subject that is likely to follow yesterday's ruling.

Jackson said that religion might be kept out of subjects like mathematics, physics and chemistry, but he did not see how it could be kept out of history, literature, the arts or even biology, in which the origin of mankind is not yet settled.

Neighborhoods differ, Jackson observed, and religious teaching that might be all right in one might be bad in another. And in all there would be some who did not like the local custom. He said he feared the court by its ruling might be setting itself up as a sort of super-school board for every district in the Nation.

Finds No Real Guide

Jackson said he found in the court's opinion no real guide for the States to follow on the subject of religious teaching in their schols, and that as a matter of fact the court, did not have a guide for itself. There was nothing in the Constitution to draw the line, Jackson said, nor in any other legal source. In short:

"It is a matter on which we can find no law but our own prepossessions."

Mrs. McCollum combplained that her son was teased when other children went to religious classes and he did not. This,, she claimed, was social pressure that violated his freedom of conscience. But Jackson thought not. He said there was no legal compulsion on the McCollum boy, and that he doubted the Constitution can protect anyone from the embarrassment that always comes with being different, whether in religion, politics, behavior or dress.

None Can Be Forced

Justice Reed said in his dissent that of course taxes cannot be used for religious purposes and nobody can be forced to follow a religion he does not want. But he said it did not follow that anybody's religious rights were violated by a plan like that used in Champaign. There are chaplains in the armed forces, said Reed, chapels at the service academies and churches on Army posts. He pointed out cases in which public money was used to provide books, transport, lunches and other help to schools run by religious groups.

Where there are buses, Reed declared, the courts will stop them, and they often have done so. But where there was no abuse, he could see no violation of the First Amendment when the schools and churches helped each other.

There are about two million school pupils in this country who take part in some form of "released time" religious classes—that is, who are let off from school if their parents want them to go to the classes, but otherwise are not. Yesterday's ruling made it plain that where such classes are given in the school building the court will put a stop to them. But the status of other released time plans—there the classes are held somewhere else—was left in doubt.

Black did not dwell upon the released time plan in general. Frankfurter said the plan was not before the court and was not being ruled on. Jackson thought the majority decision would stop the use of the released time plan. So did Reed.

imprisonment. The Michigan Supreme Court upheld his conviction by a 4-to-4 vote, leading to his appeal to the high tribunal. The high court's decision frees Oliver.

The court ruled 7-2 that the Postmaster General properly issued a fraud order against a "puzzle contest" conducted by Facts magazine.

The order was issued on the ground the magazine was conducting a scheme for obtaining money through the mails by false and fraudulent pretenses.

About $51,000 sent in the mails relating to the contest has been impounded during the litigation.

The court also ruled that the Arkansas Supreme Court violated the constitutional rights of two Negroes, Roy Cole and Louis Jones, by upholding their conviction for a crime with which they were not charged.

Held, 8-1, that civilians who volunteered for temporary duty with the Coast Guard Reserve are not entitled to "veterans' preference" in Federal employment.

By the same vote, ruled that a non-carrier owner of railroad track may not dictate terms for its use if they violate interstate commerce. The Cleveland Union Stock Yards Co. had refused to let the New York Central use its tracks when the carrier refused to pay what it considered unfair charges.

Reversed the conviction of Frank W. Mogall, superintendent of the Delta Shipbuilding Co., New Orleans, for alleged draft act violations. He was sentenced to two years and fined $500 for failing to give a local draft board facts which might have conceled the draft deferment of a subordinate worker.

Held that Mrs. Aba Badger Suttle of Lee County, Miss., field her claim for damages in the death of her husband and daughter in the wrong Federal District Court of Louisiana. It approved dismissal of the suit by the Federal Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana which held that the claim should have been field in the Western District.

Confirmed a lower court ruling refusing to permit Mrs. Mary Bell King to collect $5000 insurance in the death of her husband who drowned when his civil air patrol plane crashed off Cape Fear, N. C. The insurance company has invoked the "aviation" clause of the policy.

Granted a hearing to William J. ... is scheduled to die in San Quentin Prison March 12. Phyle pleaded guilty but since has been adjudged insane.

Refused to review the conviction of Loyd Kennedy, Columbia, Tenn., Negro, who was found guilty of shooting a State patrolman during a race riot in 1946. Kennedy was sentenced to five years.

CIO Calls Strike at Swift Meat Packing Plants

Why?

Effective March 16, the CIO-United Packinghouse Workers' Union has called a strike in 24 meat packing plants operated by Swift & Company. The reason: to try to enforce their unreasonable demands for 29 cents an hour increase, later reduced to 19 cents.

40% of all of our meat packing employes have already signed for an increase of 9 cents an hour, effective January 12, 1948. These employes, in 18 other plants, are represented by the AFL-Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen and the National Brotherhood of Packinghouse Workers.

These agreements were negotiated without strike threat. The acceptance of this 9-cent increase by the two unions indicates that they consider it fair and reasonable. The accompanying charts show why 9 cents is a liberal adjustment of wages.

* A 9-cent increase in hourly rates is equivalent to 11 cents because of clothes changing time, overtime payments, bonus, holidays, etc.

A strike is unnecessary.

It is regrettable that the CIO union has decided on a course of action which will result in loss of wages and production, and will disrupt the normal services of our company to livestock producers and consumers.

The company's desire to deal fairly with all of its employes is clearly demonstrated by its willingness to make a 9-cent settlement with the CIO union.

Public School Use Of Nuns Defended

Catholic Official Replies to Charge By Protestants on New Mexico Teachers

Msgr. Frederick G. Hochwalt, National Catholic Welfare Conference official, yesterday defended employment of nuns as public school teachers in New Mexico as necessary to keep the schools going.

His statement followed a blast by Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State (POAU) protesting use of 125 nuns and brothers and one priest as teachers on public payrolls in New Mexico.

A POAU manifesto has claimed that the Catholic hierarchy in the United States seeks a union of church and state "at least at the public treasury," and is making a political attempt to obtain public funds for parochial schools.

Not "Deploying Staff"

POAU also had attacked employment of nuns as teachers in North Dakota and Ohio. In his reply, Msgr. Hochwalt flatly denied that the Catholic Church "is deploying its teaching staff in the public schools."

He declared that where nuns are employed by local school boards "the arrangement has been initiated by the legally constituted school authorities of the community or the State, and not by the church."

In New Mexico, he cited recent congressional testimony to the effect that in sparsely settled areas, officials in charge of public instruction have had to call on nuns as teachers because they have been unable to get competent lay teachers.

"Would POAU have these communities close their schools rather than use the services of nuns?" the NCWC official asked.

Other "Inaccuracies"

Other "inaccuracies" alleged by Monsignor Hochwalt in response to the recent POAU manifesto were:

1. No Federal aid bill proposing "parity with public schools — the distribution of Federal funds" for parochial schools has been introduced in Congress.

2. No NCWC representative has asked that public funds be used to pay parochial school teachers' salaries.

3. The NCWC neither "inspired nor supported" the Taft Federal Aid Bill, S472.

4. No NCWC spokesman has proposed that "parochial schools be incorporated into the public school system."

De Valera Sees War Looming

New York, March 8 (AP).—Eamon de Valera, former Prime Minister of Eire, said today he thought the world was headed for a third World War. He added that the United Nations "doesn't amount to much."

De Valera, who was born in New York, arrived here for his first visit to this country in 18 years. He was replaced as Prime Minister by John Costello after last month's elections.

He plans a tour of this country, and said he would call on President Truman Wednesday.

Asked if he thought the world was "racing toward a third World War," De Valera replied, "I think so." He added that "the United Nations doesn't amount to very much." He said he saw little prospect for future success of the organization "unless certain nations cooperate in working toward peace."

New Arlington School Budget

A proposed Arlington County school budget was submitted yesterday to County Manager A. T. Lundberg, but both Lundberg and school officials declined to reveal the total.

Dr. Barnard Joy, school board chairman, said the board had reached a decision on which of four proposals it would recommend to the County Board, but he refused to specify which proposal had been approved pending "some announcement from Mr. Lundberg."

Lundberg said the school budget would not be made public until Saturday, when it will be submitted to the County Board along with other budget requests for the fiscal year of 1948-49.

The four proposals have been under consideration for several weeks. At a public hearing last Thursday, however, a majority of taxpayers favored a budget calling for expenditures of $2,387,609. This figure would boost the present school tax rate from $1.25 to $1.70.

Wood was indicted on a murder charge in the death of Patrolman Joseph D. Benedict, slain by a gunman just before dawn on Friday, February 13, as he was investigating a taxicab holdup.

Papal Move Seen Blow at Communism

Rome, March 8 (NYHT.).—Pope Pius XII indicated today the world must accept a sort of voluntary socialism. At the same time his associates announced he has created a new plenary indulgence for the world's Roman Catholics. Both moves were interpreted as vigorous new papal efforts to stop the Communism which threatens his native Italy.

Elections Will Be Held April 18

The Pope implied that persons who are waiting for the return of rugged individualism are guilty of "a deplorable lack of reflection." He indicated he referred to the Laissez-Faire School of Economics which wanted governments banned from business affairs.

The Pope said all men must recognize that the purpose of economics is to give each individual the chance to obtain enough to advance himself culturally and spiritually. He indicated the state should leave each man free to find his own way to advance the general good. He added, however, that each individual must assume personal responsibility for the welfare of others.

The Pope said "germs of conflict" exist in the world because there are "too great discrepancies" between the haves and the have nots.

The Pope emphasized the importance he wished attached to his words by saying he wanted professional schools and universities to begin teaching "these principles of social economics."

The new indulgence is for use in behalf of any member of the faithful who died as a result of the war. Included are soldiers, civilian bombing victims and even persons who lost their lives as a result of war-caused sicknesses. Indulgences are believed to free from purgatory persons who are suffering there for their sins.

Handicapped Girl Awaits Schooling

Eleven-year-old Mary Louise Arnold, who is nearly blind and totally deaf, has been waiting since last September for the District to arrange for her education at the New York Institute for Education of the Blind.

Almost two weeks ago, William N. Handiboe, secretary of the District Contract Board, dispatched a contract to the school covering her training since the District does not have proper facilities. The contract was arranged after many conferences with the Board of Education, Corporation counsel and the school, he said.

Handiboe said last night that he has not yet received a reply and plans to send a telegram to the school today or tomorrow seeking action.

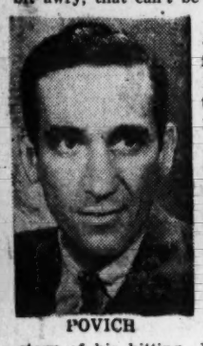
Stahley Quits GW for Post at U. of Washington

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

ORLANDO, FLA., March 8.—From manager to rookie is the strange progress of Calvin Coolidge Ermer, candidate for the second base job in the Washington training camp. If it sounds a bit awry, that can't be helped.



POVICH

He was doing very well as manager of a Class B ball club at the Nats' Charlotte farm last season, and a precocious kid he must have been because they named him the boss in midseason despite his mere 21 years.

The Washington club, however, is more interested in him as a second baseman, and anyway, it has a manager. Furman Bischer, the Charlotte sports editor, tells me that Ermer willingly chucked his job to get the chance to play in the majors.

He doesn't look like an infielder. Too tall, you'd say. But he was the best second baseman in the Tri-State League and his .279 batting average doesn't tell the whole story of his hitting. He led the league in two-baggers, banged eight triples and seven home runs in some of the Nation's roomiest parks.

ERMER'S PRESENCE makes it a tri-cornered battle for the second base job with the Nats. At this point he is apparently running third to Al Kozar and Eddie Lyons, who are up from the Southern Associaton, but neither of that pair has established himself yet.

Kozar has the most ability, the Nats' bosses think, but young Lyons has the most hustle and Ermer the most savvy. Kozar and Lyons are little guys in contrast to Ermer.

When Kozar came to the Nats last December in the deal for Stan Spence at the winter meeting in New York, a member of the Red Sox scouting system defined the fellow pretty well when he said, "Kozar will say 'Hello' at the start of the season and he'll say 'good-by' after the season ends and he won't say anything in between."

Lyons, though, pops off pretty well. He's completely uninhibited and a nice contrast to what has been traditionally a dead-fish Washington ball club. When Kozar reached camp, Lyons gave him one dark look and commented, "That guy'll never beat me out of the second base job."

He said Kozar was a good ballplayer but "he hasn't got my hustle. This is my big chance to get that second base job I've been waiting for for five years and I'm gonna run everybody else out of it this year."

Right now the Nats' bosses are having trouble with Lyons around the batting cage. He sneaks up to the plate at every chance to get his swings, in turn and out of turn. They called him on it today. "Sure," he said, "I'm always trying to get in there and hit. That's the most fun in this business—hitting. The money you get for it is second."

FOR THE FIRST TIME in a decade, the Nats are not going to have a batting order top-heavy with left-handed hitters. The retirement of Buddy Lewis and Cecil Travis and the trading of Stan Spence depleted the array of southpaw swingers which on too many occasions were push-overs for left-handed pitchers.

There will be days, against left-handed pitching, when Mickey Vernon and Gil Coan will be the only left-handed hitters in the line-up. Every member of the infield, with the exception of Vernon, is a southpaw swinger, and Manager Joe Kuhel could muster eight right-handed hitters, if he is of that mind.

At the same time he'd like to have Travis, Lewis and Spence in there in their prime, and take his chances against left-handed pitching. Or any other kind.

MANAGER JOE KUHEL is smitten by the remarkable resemblance of his tall rookie third baseman, Clarence Difani, to Joe DiMaggio, physically. And it is an amazing likeness, despite the fact that Difani is of French parentage, not Italian.

"Look at him," says Kuhel. "Facially they could be twin brothers. He wears his pants like DiMag, walks like Joe, pits his cap the same way and even cocks his head in that funny little way like DiMaggio."

Asked how he thought Difani would hit, Kuhel simply said: "Well, I can dream, can't I?"

Nats Hint At Opening Day Line-up

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Orlando, Fla., March 8.—Manager Joe Kuhel gave out a strong hint of his 1948 lineup today when he announced the makeup of the two teams that will take the field Wednesday in the first intrasquad game of the training season.

He labeled the two teams as the "Milans" and the "Ferrells," but on the former he was mustering the best talent in the camp. The batting orders he announced were:

Milans:	Ferrells:
Sullivan, ss.	Wooten, cf.
Kozar 2b	Lyons, 2b
Coan, lf.	Difani, 3b
Vernon, 1b	Stafford, lf.
McBride, cf.	Christman, 1b
Robertson, rf.	Drake, rf.
Yost, 3b	Clark, ss.
Evans, c.	Okrie, c.
Candini, p.	Hudson, p.
Curtis, p.	Pieretti, p.
Davis, p.	Murray, p.

Barring the pitchers, the Milan team could be the lineup that will start the season against the Yankees on April 19 in Griffith Stadium, with one other exception. Leon Culberson, when he arrives in camp, figures to replace Tom McBride in center field.

Sullivan Tries Anew

The Nats are apparently going into the new season with a new lead-off man in Johnny Sullivan, and apparently they've spotted Rookie Al Kozar in second place, despite the fact he is a right-handed hitter. Left-handed swingers traditionally get the second place spot, but Kozar is somewhat noted for those desirable hits to right field even though he bats right-handed.

It's plain enough now that Sherry Robertson, who made the transition from the infield to the outfield last season, is labeled as a starting outfielder. With the retirement of Buddy Lewis and the trading of Stan Spence, Robertson moves up rapidly in the reckoning.

That the Nats expect powerful hitting from Rookie Gil Coan is apparent from their move in tabbing his as the club's important third place hitter. Coan, Vernon and Robertson, however, are the only extra-base threats in the batting order.

Stafford Shows Power

Kuhel got his first look at the two Texas whiz-kids, outfielders Dean Stafford and Larry Drake today, and was interested. Big Stafford appeared the more confident swinger and there was no question of his power. Drake, the more stream-lined of the pair, and with a classic build, failed to connect solidly but Kuhel was patient with him on his first day out.

A new shortstop candidate put in his appearance today. He is Jim Clark, formerly known as Jim Jetroskey when he was with Chattanooga last season. He's a wiry little chap and perhaps the best fielding shortstop in the camp. Kuhel wants a longer look at him. Originally he was ticketed for Chattanooga again.

The Natss' bosses were pleased at the added poundage picked up by Third Baseman Eddie Yost during the winter. He now strips at 180 pounds and they hope he blossoms as a power hitter. The Yost-Difani duel for the third base job is stacking up as the hottest in the camp.

Skip Takes Backfield Coaching Job

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

J. Neil (Skip) Stahley resigned as head football coach at George Washington yesterday to become backfield coach at the University of Washington.

Stahley

Stahley's resignation, which came only one week from the time the Colonials were to begin spring practice, was announced by Max Farrington, director of athletics.

Farrington said he and the athletic committee had already met to consider a successor to the 37-year-old Stahley, but the job had been offered to no one, "not yet."

A few hous after the noon announcement that Stahley had finally made up his mind not to serve out the last year of a three-year-contract, observers felt that his successor would be either Tuffy Leemans or Johnny Fenlon, both G. W. graduates.

Neither Leemans nor Fenlon is coaching today, but both intimated they could be lured away from their present occupations "if the offer is attractive."

Leemans, an alltime GW great and one of pro football's brightest stars with the New York Giants, operates a laundry chain in Washington. He was offered the head coaching job at his alma mater before Stahley was employed.

U. Had Business Obligation

He could not devote full-time to the job then, as demanded by Farrington, because of his business.

Last night, however, Tuffy said he would leave the laundry business if the GW offer was attractive enough." Leemans helped out Coach Joe Gallagher with the St. John's football team last fall.

"Sure, I'm definitely interested," Leemans said.

Fenlon, a star Colonial quarterback in the early 30's, resigned as head coach of the University of Richmond last fall to become recreation director for the city of Fredericksburg, Va. He is under a one-year contract there.

Fenlon Interested, Too

Fenlon said he was "very happy" at Fredericksburg, but "naturally I'm interested in the George Washington job. I can't say whether I'd accept or not, because it hasn't been offered to me."

Several months ago, Fenlon said, Farrington casually mentioned the GW position to him when it was rumored that Stahley would not return for 1948.

Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin and Farrington both said they regretted Stahley's resignation. They praised him as a "real gentleman and a fine football technician."

Stahley appeared very much relieved over the situation. It was no secret that he had been undecided over returning to GW this year, but not until Saturday, when he actually tendered his resignation, was there anything definite. "I feel that it is to my advantage to accept the Washington offer," he said. I am very sorry to leave George Washington for I have lots of friends here."

Stahley served at Harvard,

Grid Dodgers Deny Okla. U. 'Raid' Charge

Brooklyn, March 8 (AP).—The Brooklyn Football Dodgers vehemently denied today the "raiding" charge of Coach Bud Wilkinson of the University of Oklahoma.

Wilkinson had written Carl Voyles, Dodger head coach, and Jonas Ingram, All-American Conference Commissioner, protesting that the Dodgers had sent a scout to the Oklahoma campus to sign up three players.

Steve Hokuf, Dodger end coach and the scout in question, admitted he had been on the campus, but claimed his visit was legitimate and that he was not trying to induce boys to turn pro before their period of college eligibility expired.

Tells of Letter

"We received a letter from Paul Burrus, Oklahoma guard, in which he said he was contemplating the advisability of joining our club if proper terms could be arranged," Hokfus said. "He said Coach Wilkinson had told him that he would give him his release, and that by attending summer school he would lack only a few hours of work for his degree, and that he could get those in 1949.

"I had contacted Ed McKeever of the Chicago Rockets, who hold the rights to John Rapacz, another Oklahoma player, who has been declared ineligible for college competition, concerning a deal for Rapacz. Ed went to Norman to talk to Rapacz, and also Burrus on the strength of Burrus' letter.

Spoke to Another

"While there I also spoke to Homer Paine, another Oklahoma player, merely asking him if he intended to return to school next fall. He said he did, and I said 'fine, go ahead,' and let the matter drop right there."

Ingram released a copy of his letter to Wilkinson in answer to the latter's protest. In the letter he said the conference would not sign a player even if his class has been graduated if he is still in school and intends to use his remaining eligibility.

League Takes Over Franchise; New Group Plans to Raise $400,000

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

President Bob Rodenberg, of Washington, was declared "definitely out" of his Baltimore Colt franchise in the All-America Football Conference yesterday.

While the team's chief stockholder went through a business-as-usual routine in the Colt front office, a group of Baltimore merchants in Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro's office made plans to refinance the club and Admiral Jonas P. Ingram, All-America commissioner, ended Rodenberg's ownership.

"The league has taken over Baltimore's franchise," Ingram said, "because Mr. Rodenberg was unable to raise the money to operate in 1948. We are confident the group now making plants for the Colts will be able to put down the $300,000 or $400,000 necessary."

Mayor D'Alesandro, who called yesterday's meeting in the hope of rounding up local money and making the Colts a civic enterprise, launched the drive by putting Charles P. McCormick, already a stockholder, at its head.

McCormick is president of one of the country's largest spice and coffee concerns and is rated exceptionally brilliant at business management. Among his associates are some of the city's wealthiest business men.

Still Place for Rodenberg

Admiral Ingram, after a glowing remark that "Baltimore's enthusiasm for the Colts beats anything I ever saw in college," said Rodenberg would be allowed back in the Colt picture if he showed financial solvency. This he did not deem likely.

"And I don't see how Rodenberg can expect to get anything back on his investment. There's no money in the treasury . . . only debts."

He said the Colts have lined up a squad several times as strong as last year's and needed only a couple of name linemen. He said he would insist that the league champion Cleveland Browns and runnerup New York Yankees make such men available.

Rodenberg Quietly Waiting

Meanwhile Rodenberg, who bought up the defunct Miami franchise and moved it to Baltimore last year, was awaiting developments quietly.

He had a "no comment" to most questions, but did express some concern over the $132,000 of personal funds sunk in the Baltimore venture.

"Looks like I ought to be paid for the promotion job I did, anyway," he declared. He referred, no doubt, to the 200,000 customers drawn by the Colts last year despite their inept showing and the fact some $50,000 worth of season tickets have already been sold.

Rodenberg, it may be remembered, was reportedly in the market for the baseball franchise of the St. Louis Browns, of the American League, last November. He withdrew, however, claiming "the stakes were too high."

Ferrier, Vines Teams in Finals

Miami, Fla., March 8 (AP).—Jim Ferrier, San Francisco, and Cary Middlecoff, Memphis, Tenn., today joined Ed Furgol, Pontiac, Mich., and Ellsworth Vines, Los Angeles, in the finals of the $10,000 Miami International four-ball tournament.

Ferrier and Middlecoff eliminated the team of Herman Keiser, Akron, O., and Johnny Palmer, Badin, N. C., 2 and 1, after Furgol and Vines had won over Dick Metz, Aarkansas City, Kans., and Skip Alexander, Southern Pines, N. C., 4 and 3.

Ferrier's great driving highlighted the match, which he virtually won on the 460-yard 31st hole with an eagle. His No. 2 iron shot from 240 yards out hit the pin and landed four feet from the cup. He sank it for an eagle three.

Furgol, who has a crippled left arm, and Vines, reformed tennis player, turned on the heat during the afternoon round after ending the morning round 1-up. They had a seven under par 63 to Metz-Alexander's 64 for the 6,310-yard Miami Springs course.

Fat Listener Gets Fed Up On Godfrey

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

OF ALL PEOPLE, Arthur (CBS) Godfrey is a Washington Post carrier!

Haight

Not satisfied with hogging the radio field, the Old Redhead is trying to sneak into our racket. Of course, he has his foot only part way in the door, but that's his method.

Godfrey is a menace to any business. I'm told he was hanging around old WJSV one day, sneaked up to an open mike and grunted—look where he is on the air today.

Time was when the station inserted a clause in his contract, a guarantee that he would not sing. He learned some trick lyrics, aired them and you probably know the result. Godfrey has the popular record industry going around in circles.

If he runs true to form, he'll be a reporter Wednesday, a columnist Friday and managing editor early next week. Just think, before the end of the month he may be publisher and I'll be asking him for a raise.

I'll have to admit, he's giving the scribes a sporting chance, for he confessed on his Monday WTOP show that he had started his new career and before he was through he was talking about increased circulation.

GODFREY SAID he rode over to Leesburg from his Virginia farm last Sunday and bought The Washington Post—"My favorite newspaper. Our family always reads it.

"My wife's mother was going to take care of the children while we went to New York later in the day," he continued. "When I called for her she also had a copy of The Post.

"When Mrs. G. and I arrived at Union Station to catch the New York train, she said: 'We haven't read The Post.' So there was nothing to do but buy another one.

"On the way up we played gin-rummy and when we arrived at our New York hotel we discovered we had left the paper on the train. And that's why The Washington Post's circulation went up," he concluded.

Yes, Godfrey carried papers last Sunday.

WITH ARTHUR talking journalism and about being a Post reader, I figure he might mention my name, so I turned up the volume of the radio to give my family a chance to hear.

His spiel shifted to the Outdoor Sports Show. I was giving up hope that he might send a free plug my way until he started talking about the bear act.

"They have a big, brown bear over at the Armory and you should see him dance," he went on.

I expected him to say something about the bear being fat like Haight, but he continued with, "Follows the steps perfectly. Looks like a person wearing a big fur coat. From the back I could recognize several women friends."

I thought he was going to say, ". . . recognize Haight."

When I reached to snap the radio off, he said, "You should see that bear walk straight up on his hind legs. He wobbled along, taking short steps. Looked just like——"

When he hesitated, I smiled. I was way ahead of him.

"Just like Arch McDonald," he concluded.

What more could I expect from a redheaded bum who keeps blurting a lousy song like "Too Fat Polka"?

W. Kentucky Top-seeded in Garden Meet

NYU Next, N. C. State Gets Third

By Murray Rose

New York, March 8 (AP).—Western Kentucky State's veteran five today was top-seeded for the National Invitation Basketball tourney as pairings were announced for the Madison Square Garden meet and the Eastern NCAA Championships.

The Hilltoppers, with a stunning 26-1 record, were surprise choices for the first ranking position. New Youk U. (20-1) was seeded second with North Carolina State (29-2) third and St. Louis (21-3) fourth. The other four teams in the N. I. T. are LaSalle of Philadelphia (19-3), Bowling Green of Ohio, (27-5), Texas (19-4) and Depaul (21-6).

Columbia vs. Kentucky

In the Eastern NCAA Eliminations, Columbia's defending Ivy League champions (19-1) will face Kentucky's Southeastern Kings (31-2) in the March 18 lid-lifter. Michigan's big nine titlists (15-5) will clash with Holy Cross (22-3), the defending NCAA champions, in the second tilt.

The Eastern finals of this meet, also held in the Garden, will be played March 20. The survivor then will tangle with the Western NCAA champion in the Garden, March 23.

ASA Bushnell, chairman of the N. I. T.'s selection committee, told metropolitan basketball writers the teams were seeded on the basis of their records and other factors, including the caliber of their opposition.

Western Kentucky will open the tourney against LaSalle this Thursday in the 8 p. m. (EST) curtain-raiser. The second game that night (about 9:45 p. m.) will match St. Louis and Bowling Green.

NYU Meets Texas

In the second set of quarter-finals Saturday, NYU will face Texas at 8 p. m. and NCS will oppose de Paul in the Windup.

Western Kentucky, St. Louis, NYU and de Paul were installed as the favorites for the first contests late today. De Paul was made the favorite over NCS in the belief that Dick Dickey, State's mump-ridden star, wouldn't be able to play much, if at all.

The semifinals of the tourney will be held March 15 and the finals March 17.

For the tourney itself, an early line had NYU 3-1, Western Kentucky and St. Louis, 41-1 each, de Paul, 5-1, NCS, 8-1, Bowling Green and Texas, 10-1 each, and LaSalle, 20-1.

Meanwhile, th western NCAA teams still were undetermined. After one of the longest campaigns on record, playoffs still are necessary to fill the fourth berths.

Washington's Sonny Boy West has a new opponent for next Monday night's feature bout at Uline Arena.

Charles (Cabey) Lewis of New York, will replace Buddy Garcia in the 10-round main event.

Garcia suffered a damaged nose in a workout at Stillman's gymnasium in New York and Promoter Goldie Abram was informed Gracia would not be sufficiently recovered for the bout.

Lewis' record shows knockouts of Doll Rafferty, Maurice LaChance, Patsy Giovanelli and Larry Bolvin, and has won twice from Juste Fontaine.

West has won 27 of 28 bouts. His only reversal was a decision to Larry Lasane, whom he later beat.

Arduini Wins 3-Round TKO Over Joe Dunn

Winchester, Va., March 8.—Tony Arduini of Washington hammered out a third-round TKO over Joe Dunn another District fighter in the feature bout on the American Legion boxing card here Saturday night. The referee stopped the fight after Arduini opened a deep cut over his opponent's eye.

FATHER-SON COMBINATION—Coach Joe (Dodo) Kennett of the Southwest Barney House offers some fatherly advice to his son, Eddie, who represents Barney in the 160-pound senior class in tonight's District AAU boxing quarterfinals at Turner's Arena. Eddie's opponent is Ben Lewis of Liberty A. C.

About Teammates

Miller Says He's Sorry About Speech

Clearwater, Fla., March 8 (AP). Eddie Miller said today he regretted his 10-minute speech which resulted in his transfer from Cincinnati to the Philadelphia Phils. The outburst turned out for the best, however, the infielder added.

"I'm sorry it happened," Miller said during an intrasquad game. "It certainly was not intended the way it looked on paper. I have the utmost respect for Johnny Neun's ability as a manager. As for the players, I meant nothing against them personally. They're my friends. It was simply my private opinion.

"Unfortunately, it became public," he added with a rueful grin. "It is unfortunate that the thing was blown up to such great proportions. That doesn't do a fellow any good—especially at this stage of his career. You can be sure I know better now."

The 31-year-old Miller, who starred at shortstop for the Reds since 1943, was referring to a speech he made two months ago in which he talked himself off the Cincinnati club. He criticized Neun's style of play and panned teammates Frank Baumholtz, Grady Hatton and Virgil Stallcup. He also predicted a last-place finish for the Reds in 1948.

"I'm trying to make a fresh start now," Miller said. "I'm not mad at anyone. In fact, I'm a in a happy frame of mind. Why not? I'm with an up-and-coming organization. I've got the confidence of my manager. I'm still at my old position. I'm making more money than I ever made before. And last but not least, I find myself alongside of the best fielding second baseman in the league in Emil Verban. I couldn't say that last year."

AAU Boxing Quarterfinals Set Tonight

Action continues in the District AAU boxing tournament tonight, 8:15, at Turner's Arena where 20 quarterfinal bouts will be held.

The outstanding bout pairs two champions—Claude Lawrence of St. Mary's and Joe Jennings of Merrick—in a 135-pound senior bout.

Lawrence is last year's featherweight senior titleholder while Jennings won the 135-pound novice crown. The latter, also, is the only local amateur to beat Golden Gloves Champion Frank Stellato.

Another outstanding bout pits Ed Tawney of Southwest Barney House against Ray Alcorn of Merrick, in the 147-pound senior class.

Scott Richardson, the fighting MP of the National Guard, again appears, meeting Bobby Bibb of St. Mary's in the senior 175-pound class.

Two heavyweight contests are also scheduled. Joe Staley of the Navy engages Earl Chissolm of Apollo and Steve McCull of Howard meets L. Dennis of Navy Quarters K. Admission is $1.50 and $2.50 ringside.

Skip Stahley Quits GW

Western Maryland, Brown and had a successful coaching career in the Navy befor coming to GW in 1946. That year his Colonials won four and lost three. In 1947 GW lost seven in a row before finishing the season by tieing Georgetown, 0-0, and thrashing Kings Point Merchant Marine.

Farrington said GW's new coach will be allowed to select his own assistants. Stahley men at GW at present are Assistants Roger Antayea and Al Sandusky.

The football problem is immense at George Washington.

In spite of its size, 14,000 students, George Washington has been outclassed in a conference which includes such football big shots as North Carolina, Duke and Maryland.

And in spite of its size, it doesn't even have a regular practice field. An open space along the Potomac has been set aside for the practice, but any punter with a bad slice is apt to dunk the ball in the river.

The 1948 schedule includes, among others, Wake Forest, Kansas, Virginia, Maryland, Duke and Georgetown.

Return to Normal? Horrors! Notion Upsets Manufacturers

By J. A. Livingston

"YOU SHOULD HAVE come with me to the Manufacturers' Club," said Alice. "Everybody there was terribly uncomfortable. And I know you'd have enjoyed it."

"You bet I would," said the Red Queen. So she poured Alice some more tea with black pepper in it.

When Alice failed to sneeze, the Red Queen said: "I'll have to use red pepper next time. You have built up an immunity to black."

Livingston

"Did they have any stuffed shirts hanging from the wall?" the White Queen asked of Alice.

"No," answered Alice, "but they served stuffed lobster for lunch."

"I'd have liked that," said the Red Queen. "Particularly watching the stuffing," and she looked severely at the Lobster, who was getting redder and redder.

"But why were the manufacturers uncomfortable?" the White Queen asked.

"They were business men," replied Alice.

"That doesn't follow," replied the White Queen.

"But it adds up," said the Red Queen.

"It also multiplies," said Alice.

"I don't understand," said the Lobster.

"WELL, IT'S like this," said Alice. "One man said he got through at the office in time to read a book at night. Another said he now got home in time to have dinner with his wife. Another said that he didn't have to ship steel sheets by airplane any more. And still another said that he was able to reduce his payroll by eliminating overtime.

"I don't understand," said the Lobster. "I thought that's what they wanted a year ago. I thought the manufacturers were working their plants overtime, their workers overtime and themselves overtime. They always complained that they were rushing like crazy."

"Yes," said Alice, "They were so rushed that some of them couldn't even get away for a few weeks in Florida. Now they can."

"That makes them uncomfortable!" said the Lobster. "Well, if they don't like Florida, what's wrong with Pinehurst?"

"This leisure gives them ulcers," declaired Alice. "At the club they kept muttering about overhead, too much overhead. When they said that I looked up, expecting a glass roof and some gulls flying. But there was just a high ceiling. Not even a heavy chandelier that might fall down."

"ONE MAN grabbed me by the arm and said vigorously: 'Look, here's my problem. Two years ago, I couldn't get enough labor; I couldn't get enough materials. I couldn't produce as fast as my customers wanted. So I hired people wherever I could find them; I found new sources of supply. I put up a new plant. Now I'm able to meet my deliveries. We have a comfortable working schedule. My foreman goes home at 5 o'clock instead of 9. And I'm worried. I'm scared to death.'"

"You mean to say," interjected the Red Queen, "that that manufacturer got what he wanted and now he's scared of what he got."

"Precisely," said Alice. "Now he says he's got to undo everything he did. He has to lay off workers; he has to cut down on his purchases of materials, and he has to figure out ways to use his new plant. The man even said he couldn't sleep nights."

"Were others like that?" asked the Red Queen.

"All the same," answered Alice. "Each one multiplied the other's fears. One fellow—he was in the refrigerator business—said: 'I used to get home at night so tired, I'd flop on the bed in my business clothes, and off I'd be in dreamland. It was wonderful. No shows. No radio. No books. No music. No bridge. No time for anything but work. But now. I get home for dinner and have to worry about how to occupy my evenings. Haven't had to work this hard since before the war!'"

"WELL," said the White Queen calling for her coat, "this has been a lovely tea, but what's the point? Surely you didn't invite me here for my company."

"Indeed, I did," said Alice. "We want to propose a merger. You have a large volume of orders on hand. We have excess plant. It's a natural."

"But if I did that," said the White Queen, "I'd be able to catch up with my orders and please my customers. Then what?"

"Then Alice would propose you for the Manufacturers' Club," said the Red Queen, "and you could get an ulcer."

Chicago Grain

Chicago, March 8 (AP).—Grains went into a tailspin today, diving as much as 10 cents in wheat and 8 cents in corn. Wheat recovered a small part of its loss before the close, but corn was unable to rally.

Prices on the Board of Trade opened lower. A rally caused some improvement, but was followed around midday by a heavy selling wave. During the last half of the session prices hung around their day's lowest in most cases with trading much smaller than on the break.

Wheat closed 8½ to 9¼ lower, May 2.36¼@2.36½. Both March and May wheat were down the 10-cent limit at one time. May, July and September corn ended down 8 cents, the daily limit, with May at 2.16½. December corn was off 6¼ cents.

Oats finished 2¼-4¼ lower, May 1.10⅝@1.10½, and soybeans were down 8 cents, the daily limit. May 2.42. Lard declined in sympathy with grains and another sharp downturn in live hogs. Final lard quotations were 80 to 97 cents a hundred pounds lower, May 21.35@21.37.

WASHINGTON 25
OFFICE OF THE ADMINISTRATOR

February 20, 1948

Mr. Donald Douglas, President
Douglas Aircraft Company
Santa Monica, California

Dear Mr. Douglas:

On the eve of the reinstatement of the DC-6 transport airplane into airline service it appears appropriate for me to make a statement to you.

The DC-6 airplane was voluntarily withdrawn from service by the scheduled airlines and your Company on November 11, 1947. Subsequently numerous modifications and engineering changes have been developed and completed on the aircraft, in order to improve safety and reliability of service.

I believe that the DC-6 today, from an engineering viewpoint, represents one of the safest, finest and most advanced airline transports available for public service. The Civil Aeronautics Administration extends its congratulations to you, the Douglas Company, and the scheduled airlines, who have cooperated so wholeheartedly with the Civil Aeronautics Administration in completing the modifications so that the airlines that have the DC-6 as part of their fleet may again use this type to meet the expanding needs of our air transport system.

Sincerely yours,
T. P. Wright

Filene's Store Opening Is Set For Thursday

By S. Oliver Goodman

A $500,000 cooperative department store, first of its kind in the Nation, will open Thursday in the nearby Shirlington, Va., business center.

The enterprise, to be known as E. A. Filene Cooperative of Virginia, Inc., is sponsored by the Consumers Distribution Corp.

Meanwhile, in the same Arlington County area, dedication ceremonies were held last night for the new Shirlington Trust Co. which is scheduled to open for business today.

A new three-story building houses the Filene's store which will be staffed by 75 persons in 31 departments. Joseph Phalon will be general manager. President of the corporation is Lester G. Ott, who will act as master of ceremonies at the opening rites. Speakers will include Senator Aiken, of Vermont and Charles Brannan, assistant secretary of agriculture.

Filene's is financed by $200,000 in preferred stock, which will be held by C. D. C., and $300,000 in common stock which was sold to the public in the Washington-Northern Virginia area. The 6000 shares of common stock were issued in $50 units.

In addition to President Ott, who formerly was regional manager of W. T. Grant Co., officers include: vice president and treasurer, David Scull; secretary, Glenn Wall.

The new store, in common with other cooperative organizations, will operate under policies providing "democratic control" by common stockholders. Each holder will have one vote, regardless of amount invested.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: O. J. Weber, former Marine Corps major, has been appointed manager of American Export Lines' Washington office. At one time he was associated with American Overseas Airlines in England . . . Lester Pratt, Washington accountant and specialist in bank examinations, will address the Bank Auditors and Comptrollers Forum tonight in New York City on "Fraud Prevention in Savings Banks" . . . James R. Cobb has resigned as assistant chief of applications and loans division of REA to join Frigidaire as manager of farm market sales.

7 Dairies and Co-op Are Indicted Here

land-Virginia Producers Association over a long period of years; Model Farms Dairy, and Highland Farms Dairy which pasteurizes the milk dispensed in 71 Highs stores here.

None of these three receives milk from the Maryland-Virginia Association. There are several smaller dairies which operate in suburban Washington.

First Legal Step

The indictment, resulting from information brought before the grand jury by the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, is the first legal step taken against any milk group here over a period of more than 15 years, during which there have been three congressional probes of milk supply and distribution.

Two St. Louis dairies are now being prosecuted on similar antitrust charges and another milk probe is under way in Chicago.

John F. Sonnet, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, declared that:

"The grand jury has charged that the effect of this conspiracy has been to increase prices to consumers, and to reduce consumption of fluid milk by maintaining prices at levels higher than many consumers can afford to pay."

Cites Alleged Agreement

Contained in the indictment was a reference to the District Health Department, alleging an agreement among the defendants that:

"The (producers) association persuade and induce the Health Department of the District of Columbia, under the guise of health regulations, to prevent the importation of milk into the District of Columbia from sources outside of the States of Maryland and Virginia and from producers who have not been inspected and licensed by the District health authorities."

A similar allegation was aired during the 1939 congressional milk probe here, and Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, yesterday reiterated the department's view that all regulations in force are necessary for the public health. Ruhland said he will study the indictment and "if any officials have been 'used' we will take immediate action."

Baltimore Police Hold N. Y. Woman For Abandonment

Baltimore, Farch 8 (AP).—Mrs. Theresa Blanchfield, 25, of New York, was held in $1000 bail today for grand jury action on a charge of abandoning her 2-year-old son.

Magistrate Preston A. Pairo heard testimony that Mrs. Blanchfield left the boy with a woman at a bus station here in January and never returned. She was arrested here yesterday.

Mrs. Blanchfield explained she had gone to New York to look for her husband, from whom she is separated. She then went to her mother's home in Bethlehem, Pa., and got a factory job.

Leonard Blanchfield, who gave his address as Severna Park, Md., said he had contributed $60 to the boy's support but was out of work until a few days ago.

The youngster fell ill and has been under the care of welfare authorities. Magistrate Pairo denied Mrs. Blanchfield's request to see him.

Cambridge, Md., March 7 (AP).—A body washed onto Smith Island in Chesapeake Bay today was identified as that of Seaman First Class C. E. Palmquist, 21, Coast Guard lighthouse keeper missing since last December 21.

Palmquist, keeper of the Shark Fin Shoal light in the lower bay, and George W. Cotty of Exmore, Va., keeper of neighboring Hooper Strait light, set out in a motorboat December 21 to spend the Christmas holidays on the mainland.

The boat "exploded" en route. Cotty's body has not been recovered.

Judge Rules Out Police Phone Bet In Gambling Case

Baltimore, March 8 (AP).—Judge Herman M. Moser ruled today that telephone bets placed by policemen cannot be used as evidence in the prosecution of bookmaking charges, unless the better can identify the person at the other end of the line.

The judge dismissed bookmaking charges against Mrs. Elizabeth Bransby and Charles MacCracken.

Their attorneys entered a motion to suppress evidence collected by police when they raided a house February 2. A search and seizure warrant gave as basis of suspicion a bet placed in a telephone calle to the house.

Judge Moser said that previous rulings of the Maryland Court of Appeals make this insufficient evidence for a warrant unless the recipient of the call can be identified.

2 Beltsville Cafes Lose License Appeals

Judge Charles C. Marbury of Prince Georges Circuit Court in Upper Marlboro, Md., yesterday upheld denial of liquor licenses to two Beltsville restaurants. Christine Schleehauf and Roland E. and Fannie J. Kidwell were refused on sale licenses after hearings before the County Board of Liquor License Commissioners.

The appeals were rejected on grounds that there were enough places selling liquor in Beltsville.

Sick Leave Abuse Shown in Report By Two Senators

Two influential Senators yesterday made public a report showing "widespread abuse" of sick leave by Federal workers. They were Chairman Bridges of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and Senator Ball (R., Minn.), chairman of an appropriations subcommittee that instituted the inquiry.

The Senators merely suggested a review of the sick and annual leave laws "with a view to eliminating abuses and tightening up what may be a too liberal system." They did not make specific suggestions.

The Civil Service Committees have jurisdiction in Congress over the leave laws. The report of the Senators will be sent to both the House and Senate committees. The House Committee is now studying the problem, and in the Senate Committee a bill is being drawn up to reduce annual leave of temporary employes from 30 to 26 days a year.

The Bridges-Ball study produced these points:

That a Federal worker who takes all of his 26 days of annual leave; the maximum sick leave of 15 days; 8 holidays, plus 104 Saturdays and Sundays will work only 212 days a year, or 58 per cent of the time.

That Uncle Sam, when compared with private industry, is "unique" in both the amount of vacation time allowed and the short length of employment required to secure it, and,

That the potential cost to Uncle Sam of the accumulated sick and annual leave of Government people is $1,100,000,000.

The committee staff made a study of the use of sick and annual leave based on a recent nine-month period. It found that 73 per cent of all employes used sick leave in that period. Abuses were found, it said, when lay-offs were about to be made, and before and after weekends.

"Noncareer employes, especially those whose work is monotonous or distasteful, are found to be frequent abusers of the privilege. Such employes have a tendency to take advantage of sick leave as it accrues rather than build up a reserve for future bona fide illness."

The Senators said they could find no good reason for giving temporary employes more generous leave privileges than permanent employes. They didn't say so, but postal employes are given only 15 days of annual and 10 days of sick leave annually.

The next move on leaves, if any, must come from either the House or the Senate Civil Service Committees.

TOKEN CUT? Annual budgets for the Treasury and Postoffice Departments will be reported to the House today by its Appropriations Committee. Insiders say only "token cuts" will be made in the President's budgets for the two departments; that the committee reductions won't be more than 1 per cent. Also, that neither department would have to make any sizable number of layoffs under the committee recommendations.

However, the Internal Revenue Bureau will be taken for a verbal ride. A report on revenue's work methods and policies has been prepared by investigators for the House committee. It raises cain with "red tape" and cumbersome operations in the agency, and it's said to be critical of the Boston, Wilmington and several other revenue offices.

The committee last year forced Revenue to lay off several thousand employes after they had undergone costly training. It gambled on a tax cut and failed. The report is aimed at trying to justify that slash.

It's possible that Revenue will be forced to transfer additional employes here to its field offices. Several committee members are known to be critical of the number of employes here.

Today's bill won't include funds for the Coast Guard and the Customs Service. Both of these Treasury agencies are undergoing committee investigations. Budgets for them won't be recommended until after the inquiries are complete. It's reported that the so-called Ball rider which reduces overtime payments to Customs employes has been stricken from the bill.

LOYALTY: The Civil Service Loyalty Review Board has a new member. He's Clem W. Collins of Denver, a member of the accounting firm of Collins & Peabody. He's a past president of the American Institute of Accountants and the author of several books on accounting and tax matters.

Incidentally, it's a safe bet that the loyalty board will hear the case of Dr. Edward U. Condon, the hard-hitting director of the National Bureau of Standards, who is being fired at from all directions by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The board agreed to hear the case at a meeting here last week.

At least the board will give Dr. Condon a chance to speak his piece—something the committee has refused to do. Also the board will hear evidence on both sides of the case—another committee shortcoming.

NOTES: Civil Service has an exam open for health program specialists. Starting salaries from $3397 to $7102. . . . Senator Downey (D., Calif.) lost his fight to prevent the appointment of Marion Clawson as director of Interior's bureau of land management. . . . The American Civil Liberties Union describes as "unwarranted and unjustifiable" the calls for the bill's defeat.

Strongbox Yields $1300 in Coins in Market Robbery

Loot Totals $1868 As Thief Uses Meet Cleaver to Hack Open Locker

Police yesterday were seeking a thief who used a store's meat cleaver to chop his way into its strongbox and steal $1868.

The loss was the greatest—and heaviest—of several reported "inside jobs." Police are looking for a former employe suspected of the theft, which included $1300 worth of coins.

Samuel T. Tauber of 1360 Tewkesbury pl. nw., owner of Fairfax Super Market at 3859 Pennsylvania ave. se., told police he found the hacked and empty steel locker at 8 a. m. yesterday. Two sturdier safes containing a total of $11,000 were untouched.

More casually, a daylight thief walked off with two watches and two diamond rings at 11 a. m. yesterday in the busy office-residence of Dr. Harold A. Craft, 3109 16th st. nw., the physician reported to police. He estimated the loss at $600.

Dr. Craft said he was in his inner office with a patient when the thief entered, strode calmly past five other patients in a reception room, and went upstairs. Returning a few minutes later, the thief as casually walked out.

The "visitor" was described as a Negro, about 30 years old, weighing about 155 pounds, smooth-shaven and slightly stooped.

John A. Carleton, manager of Bellevue Hotel, 15 E st. nw., yesterday asked police to search for a former clerk of his hotel, and $900. The clerk, Carleton said, left the hotel on February 14; the money was taken some time Sunday night.

At the same time, Thurman Williams, porter there, reported the loss of a grey suit and other clothing from his unlocked room.

A final clew was added later. Richard Carlson, sailor stationed on the U.S.S. Juneau, told police a man answering the description of the missing clerk lifted his wallet, with $97, from a paper rack in the washroom of the Greyhound Bus Terminal, Sunday night.

Walter Cohen, owner of Tabb's Shoe Store, 1200 7th st. nw., reported that $43 was taken from his store Sunday by someone who entered through a transom. Police arrested two boys, 10 and 14 years old, but did not recover the money.

From 25 to 30 unregistered pistols were stolen from the gun shop of Lynch H. Fulwiler at 904 11th st. nw., the lock and gunsmith reported to police yesterday. Fulwiler of 1517 Lee blvd., Arlington, Va., said the thief broke through a rear door.

Police said the fact that a number of registered pistols were passed up and only the unregistered ones taken showed that the thief knew his way around both the store and underworld markets.

Year's Probation

Playful Gun Girl Released

JO ANN ROGER
Gets Suspended Sentence

An 18-year-old Portsmouth, Va., girl—who playfully sprayed five GIs with revolver shots in a shooting gallery here February 5 and since has languished in jail—was freed on probation yesterday.

At the time of her arrest the girl gave her name as Jo Ann Rogers of Austin, Texas. Yesterday, however, her family disclosed in Municipal Court that her real name is Dorothy Talley of Portsmouth.

Before disposing of the case, Judge George D. Neilson expressed frowning disapproval that Miss Talley had remained in jail 33 days and accused the girl's court-appointed attorney, Thomas David, of not keeping faith with his client.

Yesterday the attorney explained he had approached several bondsmen but they refused to post the $300 bond. David said that even though he offered the bondsmen $150 in cash collateral they declined because the girl was from out of town.

Judge Neilson then agreed the defense attorney had done "everything possible" to free the girl.

The shooting took place at 418 9th st. nw. Miss Talley fired four shots from a .22 caliber revolver at five soldiers, hitting one of them in the leg.

At her trial, her attorney argued the girl had been drinking, was in a playful mood and thought the revolver was loaded with blanks. Because the injury to the one soldier was not serious, the charge was reduced from assault with a dangerous weapon to simple assault.

Judge Neilson, who found the girl guilty last week, yesterday suspended a six-month sentence, released her in custody of her parents and ordered her to report to a probation officer at Portsmouth for one year.

3 Men Hurt As Truck, Auto Collide

Injuries of One Termed Critical; Rockville Man Hit At Intersection

Three men were injured, one critically, when an automobile and a District refuse truck collided shortly after noon yesterday at 3d and G sts. sw.

Critically injured was James Conic, about 40, a barber, of 328 Tst. nw. He is in Casualty Hospital with severe head injuries.

Police said he was riding in the auto which was driven by his cousin, Lemuel H. Conic, 38, also a barber, of 424 57th st. ne. The refuse truck, according to police, was operated by James Green, 37, of 1522 G st. se.

Injuries Are Slight

Two men riding on the truck, Hugh Comer, 59, of 1032 S. Capitol st., and Augustus Minor, 63, of 807 Howard rd. se., were treated for slight injuries at Providence Hospital. Police estimated property damage at between $500 and $1000.

Samuel Fryer, 50, of Rockville, Md., was admitted to Freedmen's Hospital for x-rays and observation in undetermined condition after being struck by a car at 7:35 a. m. at Porter st. and Connecticut ave. nw. Police identified the driver of the car as Thomas A. Whiteman, 26, of 8723 Ridge rd., Bethesda, Md.

A two-car crash at about 8 a.m., at Georgia ave. and Ingraham st. nw., sent Mrs. Dorothy McGrath, 52, of 35 Cypress pl., Potomac Heights, Md., to Walter Reed Hospital with a possible fractured back and contusions. Her condition is undetermined.

Police said she was a passenger in a car driven by her son, Paul R. McGrath, 19, who was charged with colliding. Police charged the second driver, Martin A. McCrory, 56, of 5311 14th st. nw., with failing to yield the right of way.

Police list the driver of the bus as Charles T. Nestor, 23, of 3306 Lancer dr., Hyattsville, Md.

Driver, 76, Fined $50 On 'Leaving' Charge

Seventy-six-year-old George J. Gaskins, 1627 East Capital st., paid a $50 fine yesterday in Municipal Court, on a charge of leaving after colliding, noting this was his first automobile accident.

Testimony before Judge George D. Neilson indicated that Gaskins was driving the car which struck Miss Evelyn Scott, 22, of 906 2d st. nw. Wednesday at North Capitol and K sts. nw. is recovering from a fractured left leg at Casualty Hospital.

Gaskins testified he head a thud, but thought he had sideswiped a parked car. He said he pulled in at the first available parking space, about 50 feet from the scene, got out and looked back around. A motorcycle driver, Willie Blunt of 312 Rand pl. ne., followed him and told him to halt.

Judge Neilson held that he should have looked at the car he thought he struck, even if he did not realize he had inflicted personal injury.

D. C. Budget Hearings Ordered

Health Problems To Get Attention In Study Starting March 30, Horan Says

Representative Walt Horan (R., Wash.) yesterday ordered hearings to start March 30 on the District's 101-million dollar budget for the next fiscal year.

Horan is chairman of the House District Appropriations subcommittee which handles the annual District money bill.

Special atention is to be given in this year's hearings to District public health problems, Horan said.

He said he will invite representatives of private health agencies to testify on the program.

He added that private citizens, who will be heard as usual after testimony of officials is completed, are expected to apply in writing to the House Appropriations Committee office.

Horan referred to the call for cutting the budget to the bone made Saturday by Representative George J. Bates (R., Mass.) whose House District Fiscal Affairs subcommittee handles revenue raising bills.

Horan declared the budget should be based on actual needs, but said he will go into the budget hearings with the assumption that there will be a bill this year to increase District revenue. Horan is for a district sales tax; Bates is against a sales tax.

See "People in the News" on Page 2 for sketch of Horan.

Mason Charges Chief Surgeon 'Sneaked in' Nonresident for Tuberculosis Care

By Adrienne Tassler
Post Reporter

The "battle of Gallinger" reached a new stage yesterday with Commissioner Guy Mason demanding the removal of Dr. Brian Blades as chief surgeon of the hospital for allegedly "sneaking in" a non-resident tuberculosis patient.

Dr. Blades, head of George Washington Hospital's surgical staff, has criticized Health Department administration of Gallinger and urged that control of the municipally-operated hospital be turned over to an independent "hospital department."

There were these developments in the controversy over control of the institution:

1. Mason released a report from the Health Department's Hospital Permit Bureau charging that a resident of Baltimore was admitted to Gallinger for "emergency" treatment but actually was scheduled for thoracic surgery and long-time tuberculosis care.
2. Mason asked Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of George Washington University, to remove Dr. Blades because "I want another man in there . . . I don't want him."
3. The Commissioner also blamed Dr. Sol Katz, chief of tuberculosis services at Gallinger, for what he described as the "illegal" stay at Gallinger and promised to have him disciplined.
4. The District Medical Society announced that its committee on medical care in public institutions would launch an immediate probe of conditions at Gallinger.

Dr. Greear — Dr. Pincock

Hospitalization Urged

According to the report, brought to Mason's attention by Assistant Health Officer Daniel Seckinger, on January 13, 1948, a Mrs. Grace Allocca visited the Gallinger admitting office. Hospitalization was recommended.

She was described as a resident of Baltimore who was indigent and had previously been hospitalized at George Washington Univeristy Hospital as a private patient of Dr. Blades.

After intervention by Dr. Donald Effler, who was chief of surgical service, she was admitted to the hospital for emergency care only. Nonresident patients cannot be admitted except in emergencies.

On January 30, however, according to the report, the patient was transferred from surgery to the tuberculosis ward for "long-time continued care."

Mrs. Allocca, according to the report, had been living with her husband prior to hospitalization although the admitting report said they were separated. He frequently visited her while she was in the hospital, the report said.

Operation Called Off

A scheduled operation was called off after further investigation of the case and plans were made to transfer the patient to a Maryland sanitarium. The patient left the hospital February 13 "after having been a free patient there for a month," the report concluded.

Commissioner Mason charged that Dr. Blades, with the assistance of Dr. Katz, succeeded in having Mrs. Allocca transferred to the tuberculosis ward.

"It was a squeeze play—that's all," he declared.

Dr. Marvin described Dr. Blades as one of the "best chest surgeons in the United States, if not the best" and expressed the view that when the "facts in the case are revealed" there won't be very much "difference of opinion" between Commissioner Mason and himself.

He said he would investigate the charges before issuing a full statement.

Earlier, the District Medical Society announced that its committee on medical care in public institutions would launch an immediate probe of Gallinger. Theodore Wiprud, executive secretary of the society, said the investigation was scheduled even before last week's request for such a probe by Health Officer George C. Ruhland.

Dr. Selinger

Dr. Raymond T. Holden, president of the society, asked the committee's chairman, Dr. Maurice A. Selinger, to give "priority" to the Gallinger investigation. In a letter to Commissioner Mason he said the executive board of the society "has been deeply perturbed by the inadequacies said to exist at Gallinger Hospital."

Other members of the committee scheduled to investigate Gallinger are Dr. James N. Greear, jr., Dr. A. Clagett Gray, Dr. J. Ross Veal and Dr. Carolyn Pincock.

Dr. Blades, in his attack on Gallinger, criticized a host of "deficiencies"—including space, equipment and even the 40-hour work-week. He said there was need of an immediate overhauling of the administrative system, in many instances to keep patients from serious and unnecessary delays while awaiting surgery.

In Abortion Case

3 Offer Alibi Testimony For Peckham

The Government's case against Dr. Henry L. Peckham, on trial in District Court charged with performing an abortion, suffered a setback yesterday at the hands of three defense witnesses.

Dr. Peckham is charged with an unsuccessful attempt at abortion on Mrs. Hubert Stottlemyer, 37, at his office, 428 8th st. se., on January 3, and a completed abortion on her two days later at Mrs. Stottlemyer's former residence, 240 Van Buren st. nw.

To contradict the prosecution charge that Dr. Peckham treated Mrs. Stottlemyer the evening of January 3, the defense brought to the stand Mrs. Juanita La May, of 480 F st. sw.

Women in Office

Mrs. La May testified she went to Dr. Peckham's office the night of January 3 for treatment of a back ailment. She said she left her home at about 7 p.m. and when she arrived at the office found two women patients ahead of her.

She said she was the last patient treated by Dr. Peckham after which he accompanied her from the office. She said they parted in front of the office.

The defense then accounted for January 5, first bringing to the stand Mrs. Dolly Taylor, of 1819 K st. nw., who said Dr. Peckham was a friend of her family and known to them for many years. She testified that Dr. Peckham was a visitor at her home on January 5 from 2 to 5 p.m.

Brother Testifies

Felix Peckham, the defendant's brother who lives with Dr. Peckham at 640 Princeton st. nw., testified that Dr. Peckham returned home shortly after 5 p.m. on January 5.

He said he and his brother bathed and dressed, then went to the apartment of Dorsey Offutt, an attorney, for dinner, arriving there between 5:45 and 6 p.m. Offutt is one of the attorneys defending Dr. Peckham.

The trial of Dr. Peckham, who last month was tried and acquitted with Attorney James J. Laughlin on a similar charge, continues today.

Drive Reaches 74% of Goal

Margaret Truman Named 'Voice of the Symphony'

The Washington Post

MARGARET TRUMAN, named "The Voice of the Symphony" presents automobile keys to Paul D. Lagomarcino, G. W. U. law school senior, who won the contest and the car

Miss Margaret Truman yesterday was identified as the "Voice of the Symphony" and a 26-year-old George Washington University law student was top winner in the contest.

Simultaneously, Campaign Chairman Edward Burling, jr., announced at a luncheon in Hotel Mayflower that the National Symphony's sustaining fund campaign had recorded 74 per cent of its $165,000 goal. The drive has been extended "probably" for two weeks.

"Everything considered, we're in remarkably good shape," Burling said. "And I feel confident we can do the job and go over the top." A "victory" luncheon will be held at the conclusion of the campaign, he announced.

Miss Truman was guest of honor at the luncheon, together with the contest winners.

Prize Winner

First prize winner in the $5000 competition was Paul D. Lagomarcino of 2215 H st. nw. For identifying the "Voice" and writing the best statement on why Washington should support the symphony in the opinion of the judges, Lagomarcino won a 1948 Mercury town sedan.

Lagomarcino told how he first learned to like music while in the Air Forces because "in the town I was raised there was no serious music—all they had was a juke box." He said "all children should have the opportunity to hear good music at an early age" as a "part of their education."

Others revealed as winners in the contest, in order of their selection, and their prizes: Mrs. E. Durkin of 2707 Queens Chapel rd., Mount Rainier, a Philco Model 1050 console television receiver; Miss Ruth B. McJimsey of 4762 Lee blvd., Arlington, first quality Hollander dyed muskrat coat; Mrs. Kitty Liebschutz of 1222 26th rd., South, Arlington, mouton lamb coat.

John F. Buckle of 714 South Royal st., Alexandria, combination radio-phonograph; Mrs. Dolores Allen of 3010 Massachusetts ave. se., lady's wrist watch; Mrs. Donald McKnew of 2429 Kalohama rd., diamond and gold butterfly brooch; Mrs. James T. Jardine of 4334 P st. nw., Hot Point electric disposal unit; Mrs. Sally H. Greenberg of 421 B st. ne., Capitol record player; Gordon W. McBride of 219 Raymond st., Chevy Chase, airplane luggage.

In addition to the $122,302.65 intake officially recorded, an impromptu fund raising gesture at yesterday's luncheon brought promises of gifts totaling another $3000.

All of the winners in the "Voice of the Symphony" competition correctly identified the voice and also submitted 50-word statements on why the orchestra should have the city's support. Some 700 radio broadcasts gave the one clue to the voice—"the famous daughter of a famous man."

Local Talent to Star At Fashion Group Show; Maid of Cotton Arrives

By Peggy Preston

WASHINGTON'S own small, but promising dress designing set is due for some recognition this week.

The Fashion Group, a women's organization which customarily sponsors showings of clothing by prominent American designers, has decided to give local talent a boost. So, this month's luncheon and meeting of the group will be given over to a show featuring the handiwork of eight Washingtonians.

Peggy Preston

It takes place Wednesday, at 12:30 p. m., in the East Room at the Mayflower Hotel. Since it is also to be the Fashion Group's annual Red Cross luncheon, the list of special guests will include several from that organization's headquarters here.

Those to be represented in the show include Louise Armour, a young Californian who has gained considerable fame for her custom-made clothes since setting up shop a here a few years ago.

Mme. Camille Chautemps, whose beautifully decorated shop on Connecticut ave. has the air of a Paris salon, will show three or more of the hats for which she is locally famous. Other hat designers who will be represented are Edith Burrows, Moselle and Philip Robinson.

Betty Beane, a slim, young, blond girl who has been creating pretty custom frocks for a couple of years, will be included, as will Magda, who conducts a local school for designers. Magda, incidentally, was the designer chosen by members of the Congressional Club to instruct their current sewing classes. Wives of Senators and Representatives decided to make their own Easter clothes this year and called in an expert to help with the project.

Charles Latshaw, an artist who has learned how to put his amusing and highly individualized sketches on squares of silk, will show several of his scarfs. Children's clothing in the show will be by Mary Davis.

INCLUDED in the show will be the exotic costumes of Yvette, Washington's most recently arrived designer. Although she has been here but a few months, Yvette has already become popular with members of the diplomatic set who like the European and Far Eastern flavor of her clothes.

In personal life she is known as Trudy Baum and is as lovely to look at as are her creations. Tall, with dark brown hair and eyes, she was born in Vienna and studied for several years in Paris where she served apprenticeships in several famous French fashion houses.

YVETTE

Before the war she spent a few years in Shanghai where she learned to make use of the exquisite Chinese fabrics and colors. When she went to New York she continued to give an Oriental slant to many of her clothes, which gives them an unusual and distinctive touch.

Still maintaining her Manhattan shop and workroom, Yvette has a small establishment here and divides her time between the two cities.

MATILDA NAIL, the highly heralded Maid of Cotton, arrived in Washington yesterday, accompanied by 11 pieces of luggage, packed with a complete cotton wardrobe.

Yet one of the first things she did after alighting from her plane was to look for a spring hat—preferably a cotton one, of course.

The tall, stunning young Texas girl made a spectacular entrance during the luncheon and fashion show in the Mayflower Lounge. She was a bit breathless after a dash from Capitol Hill where she was officially welcomed by the Texas delegation. Wearing a dark blue and black cotton suit, she carried a huge bouquet of American Beauty roses, the gift of Senator Tom Connally.

Despite the fact that life has been one public appearance after another since January 26, when she was selected as the Maid, she has retained her fresh and dewy look. Her secret? Lots of sleep, she says. And lots of food! Claims she gets more than her quota of both, but has neither gained nor lost a pound during her grueling tour. Texas stamina is responsible, she maintains.

At 19 years of age, she uses little makeup, just a touch of powder, lipstick and matching nail polish. But she does treat herself to the luxury of a home facial every night before bedtime.

THE coffers of St. John's Children's Home are a bit fuller today, the result of a benefit fashion show staged last night by the Junior Guild of the Women's City Club.

Between 75 and 100 young business girls, who make up membership in the guild, attended the affair which took place at 8 o'clock in the clubhouse, 1733 I st. nw. The show, with an Easter Sunday angle, was presented by the Marjorie Blake shop on Connecticut avenue, and featured morning-to-dusk fashions.

Robert Lovett Has 'Double'; Rayburn Hunts Baby Sitter; Coleridges Coming Here

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

TRICKLING from the gloomy, air-conditioned State Department corridors comes a cheery story which has set Washington chuckling. One of Undersecretary of State Robert Lovett's assistants bears a slight resemblance to his boss. Dark, somewhat bald, the likeness is more apparent when the minion in question is seated. One day a pal, stepping into the Undersecretary's office, spotted what he thought was his friend, sitting, back to the door, at Mr. Lovett's desk.

"Why, you old son-of-a-so-and-so," he chortled with gay masculine camaraderie, "what are you doing at the Undersecretary's desk?"

The figure at the desk twirled around. It was Mr. Lovett, very much in the flesh. "A very fair question, Mr. — —," the Undersecretary retorted to his embarrassed vis-a-vis, "and one I often ask myself!"

Bachelor Hunts Baby Sitter

IT ISN'T often a bachelor, much less a leading Congressman, takes time out to corral a baby sitter. But the other night Texas' exceedingly masculine, very much unmarried Representative Sam Rayburn, left a perfectly good party to track down a baby sitter. Asked how come by interested guests, hoping against hope for a touch of refreshing scandal, Mr. Rayburn replied righteously that it was for his namesake in whom, quite naturally, he takes an active paternal interest. The namesake, it seems, is the second son and third child of the Eugene Worleys. Mr. W., also a Texan and a member of Congress, hails from Shamrock and represents the Amarillo district. Up to now, it's uncertain whether Representative Rayburn's search was successful—whether the Worleys were able to make their date.

Coleridges Coming to Capital

DUE BACK in Washington next month for a two-year stint with the combined Chiefs of Staff are the Richard Coleridges. A captain in the British Navy, Richard Coleridge served as secretary of the Combined Chiefs of Staff some years ago. Since then he's been attached to the military aide of the U. N., and has been living, happily rent free, in the Alfred Lunts' apartment. Captain Coleridge, who's a great-great-grandson of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, spent the early war years as liaison between the British Staff and France's unfortunate General Gamelin.

"Roz" Coleridge, a beauty who wears her prematurely gray hair in a coronet of braids, is a daughter of the late Admiral Lord Fisher, who commanded the British Fleet.

She's a niece of H. A. L. Fisher, the famous historian, and of Vaughan Williams, one of England's most noted modern composers; and a cousin of authoress Virginia Woolf.

Making Art History

MOST exciting art world news is the National Gallery's forthcoming exhibition of some two hundred priceless paintings brought here from Germany for safekeeping. As everyone knows, the pictures were discovered by our Third Army in the Merkers salt mine, the same cache where millions worth of gold bullion and an unestimated amount of pathetic loot, personal jewelry and such taken from concentration camp victims, were concealed. It's the first time in history that a nation has taken care of a defeated country's cultural heritage and returned it without urging. Now, at General Lucius Clay's request, the paintings are going back to German

The paintings are to be exhibited in Washington only, though many museums have made requests for them, because the risk of shipping is too great. Since they're uniquely irreplaceable, it is impossible to estimate their value and so they are uninsured.

Discovering this great treasure was merely a routine Army job, and they were sent here, after much high-circle discussion, partly because they were in bad shape, partly because the damaged Wiesbaden Museum wasn't sufficiently repaired to store them safely. The journey from Germany to Washington was entirely prosaic except for one small happening. Shipped on an Army transport, the paintings were placed in the officers' saloon, high and dry amidships, guarded day and night. The wardroom where the officers ate and relaxed, was adjoining. To obviate fire hazard, smoking was forbidden not only in the saloon but also in the wardroom. The disgruntled officers, forced to chew gum, became very anti-art.

In Washington, the paintings were installed in the National Gallery's best air-conditioned storeroom (Gallery officials will be very glad to get it back). Nothing was "done" to the canvases except to have innumerable blisters, caused by salt mine dampness, "laid." However, the paintings look better than before because the storeroom air-conditioning, retaining just the correct amount of moisture, acts like tonic to old paint.

Libraries of the future will be essentially functional in architecture and operations. They will have humidity and temperature controls. There will be no windows. All lighting will be artificial. China Can Wipe Out Illiteracy With U. S. Aid, Dr. Yen Says

By Genevieve Reynolds

Top-notch official and residential society turned out yesterday to hear Dr. James Yen, noted educator and author of a "Simplified Chinese," explain the progress of the mass education movement in China. Occasion was a tea sponsored by the United Services to China on the Shoreham's weekly program, "Celebrity Interview," in the UNew Palladiam Room.

"Given 5 to 10 years, China will be able to wipe out all illiteracy at the cost of $6 (American) per capita," predicted slender, aristocratic Dr. Yen.

"Despite the war with Japan," he continued, "plus the fight against the Communists, over five million Chinese people have been taught to read and write. Since the program originated in 1929 more than 60 million people have been taught to read."

Dr. Yen, who conceived the idea for mass education while working with Chinese labor troops in France during World War I, said that the Chinese former or housewife could be taught to read in 96 hours by devoting one hour daily to the task. But, he added, the educational program must be followed by 18 months of social, economic and agricultural correlation."

Asked if the Nationalist government backed the Mass education program, he replied, "The government hasn't been active because of the war but has cooperated when ever possible. If given help I am sure the Koumintang Government will assist and cooperate.

Queried if aid for education would be more effective than military aid, Dr. Yen answered, "Both go together, "adding, at least 10% of the aid under the Marshall Plan should go to China's education movement."

"One of the greatest needs of China is to raise the standard of living of the people," he explained. "Our basic problems still are illiteracy, disease and disgovernment. In our mass education movement we not only tried to teach the people to read and write but tried to improve livestock and agriculture, and to banish high land, high tax rates by setting up cooperatives."

Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, chairman of United Services to China, who presided, announced that the National Teachers Association had just donated a check for $30,000 tocontinue the mass education program in China.

In introducing Dr. Yen. Associate Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, declared, "Dr. Yen is doing the most important single job in the world today. He speaks for 450 million Chinese who can't speak for themselves."

Guests at the head table included the Chinese Ambassador, Dr. V. K. Wellington Koo, the former head of the Far Eastern Division, Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck, and Mrs. Hornbeck; Mrs. George Mesta, China's former Foreign Minister, Dr. H. H. Kung; Mrs. Albert Wedemeyer; Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Dr. William Carr, of the National Educational Association; Dr. Paul Douglas, president of American University; Miss Genevieve Wimsatt, Mrs. Robert Taft, Maj Gen. Louis C. Little.

Mansfield Urges ERP Action Before April 18

Representative Mike Mansfield of Montana yesterday stressed the urgency of Congress passing the European Recovery Plan before elections are held in Italy on April 18.

Speaking at the Woman's National Democratic Club's luncheon held at headquarters, he said that passage of ERP would be a shot in the arm for the present government in Italy. "If Italy goes Communist we will lose Greece, Turkey, Austria and western Germany," he predicted.

Mansfield said he favored aid to China but thought the need for help at the moment in Western Europe is more pressing. The speaker emphasized that the Chinese Communists are aligned to Moscow and always have been. "If we embark on an aid China program, we must be prepared to go all the way," he declared.

At 47th Annual D. C. Conference

DAR Backs UMT, Unamerican Inquiry, Hears Rep. Gossett Attack Stratton Bill

The District Daughters of the American Revolution, at its 47th annual conference yesterday, in a series of resolutions endorsed Universal Military Training, commended the Un-American Activities Committee and called for the withdrawal of the textbook "Building Citizenship" by R. O. Hughes from the District Schools.

Delegates from the 60 some local chapters, in a motion, also called upon citizens to watch carefully all courses in schools to prevent subversive matter from being taught. After accolading the Un-American Activities Committee for its work, the delegates called upon Congress to make and to continue adequate appropriations for future use of the Committee.

At the opening session conclavegoers applauded Representative Ed Gossett's plea to strengthen immigration laws and his opposition to the Stratton Bill, which provides for admitting 400,000 displaced persons into the United States over a four-year period.

"The Displaced Persons lobby is one of the largest and best paid lobbies in Washington," Representative Gossett declared. "These lobbies are backed up by a nationwide organization that has spent and is spending millions of dollars on propaganda."

Would Abolish Camps

Gossett, a member of the subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee's Immigration Committee, declared that DP camps should have been closed and abolished a year ago.

"To solve the problem by dumping any part of them into this country is the worst and most dangerous of many alternatives," he asserted. "Ninety per cent of some 800,000 persons in some 300 DP camps still under our supervision could and should have been repacould and should have been repatriated. Such could and would have been done but for the selfish, vicious, political, and misguided humanitarian pressures in this country."

The speaker contended that not more than 30 per cent of the so-called displaced persons were in fact displaced at the time the war ended, but for various reasons many have displaced themselves and flocked into the camps from all over Europe. "While a few good people remain in these camps, they are by and large the refuse of Europe," averred Representative Gossett."

"When well grounded objections are raised to the character of the DP's who would come under the Stratton bill, promonents always answer that we will screen them carefully," said Gossett, "Our screening to date has been a joke—a joke for which we may dearly. In this connection I would point out that thousands of refugees are now coming in under a Strationized executive order issued by the President, December 22, 1945.

Gosset further said that in the President's directive which seeks to facilitate DP immigration appears this stipulation. "Vias should be distributed fairly among persons of all faiths, creeds, and nationalities. I desire that special attention be devoted to orphaned children to whom it is hoped the majority of visas will be issued."

"This provision has been totally ignored," stated the Lone Star State Representative. "According to officials of the State Department, about 20 per cent of the persons in the DP camp were Jews. State Department officials before an Immigration Committee admitted that 75 per cent of all visas issued had been issued to persons of Jewish faith. Thus rank discrimination is practiced against Protestants, Catholics, orphaned children and others. In fact, gentiles in our zone in Europe have been known to masquerade as jews in search of preferred treatment."

Banquet Tonight

The conference, which will close with a gala banquet tonight at the Mayflower Hotel, heard reports of State regents and State chairmen last night.

Mrs. W. H. Schrunert, State chairman of the Homemakers committee reported that the committee had sent 12 girls to camp for a two week period and gave a $100,000 scholarship to students in Senior High Schools.

Husband's Habit of Evading Wife's Requests For Handyman Help Affects 5-Year-Old Son, Who Disobeys and Proudly Says, "Just Like Dad"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband is a busy man, with a full-time job in addition to teaching 12 hours a week on the side, so he isn't home much; and despite his high intelligence, he is like a child around the house.

Thus the burden of tending our 5-year-old son, a six-room house, yard and garden fall on me, because Ned seems neither to see nor remember things that have to be done. He will help with chores if I ask,—and if he doesn't forget! —but should I have to remind him daily?

He helped in the garden three times, then said, "Let the weeds have the rest." He drops his things and lets them lay, and if they happen to drop in the bedroom I sometimes leave them for days, hoping he will put them away. But finally I can't stand it and pick up after him.

He never knows where his things are and depends on me to point them out. He says why should he bother looking when I always know where they are. He will promise to get something I want and then forget (or say he forgot); and sometimes he will start a job around the house, which I have to finish months later.

He used to make social plans for us and we always managed to keep them; but now it is hard to get a baby sitter on short notice and I have difficulty finding one—but he expects me to do it. Also, he leaves all decisions about the boy to me; and if the boy misbehaves, Ned asks me, "Why don't you do something?"

Now the boy is acquiring his father's traits. Ten minutes after I tell him to do something and he disobeys, he will say, "I forgot," or "I don't have time, I'm busy," and then add with pride, "I'm just like daddy, aren't I?"

I have a feeling the boy just naturally wants to be like the more admired parent, and since his father is always nicely groomed, he instinctively favors him. But I want the boy to grow up, and I don't think he will by emulating his father. So what am I to do?

Z. A.

Man Resents Nagging Wife

DEAR Z. A.: As you say, Ned is childish—in his emotional resistance to the proposition of being an adult co-parent and homebody. But more than that, he is now in flight from a nagging wife, and I daresay this has much to do with his "teaching 12 hours a week on the side,"—a pious excuse to minimize his participation in family life.

You and Ned are equally disappointed in each other. He counted on you to be a companion, not a taskmistress, as witness the fact that "he used to make social plans for us," a practice now dying out, I infer (to judge from your past-tense wording),—probably because you consistently underscored the difficulties of getting out for some recreation, when he had hoped you'd be joyously responsive.

You, on the other hand, expected that his home would be the center of his interests and that he would match your diligent application to the seamy side of homemaking; in other words, that he would be the masculine complement of your character and temperament—on which score he has fallen down completely.

Wife Has Taken The Wrong Tack

COMPARED to Ned, you are the more mature person; but so far you haven't employed your advantage wisely. I think you might have evoked more home-front cooperation from him if, from the first, you had met him halfway in gracious spirit about social gadding, and then cheerfully wooed his help in making more such companionship possible.

Instead of setting this evocative leadership pace, it seems you took the tack of putting him in wrong by taking the world on your shoulders, so to speak, sentencing yourself to a drudge-martyr routine, beaming all sorts of reproach-pressure at him for being like he is, and thus got his back up—so that he is feuding with you unconsciously, and also progressively bored with your company, hence witlessly giving his son a bad example.

The boy's identification with the father has to do with his sense that both are on the defensive against you, the Voice of Authority. His "pride" is simply in the fact that he conspicuously resembles dad in one respect at least —and I daresay you first brought that likeness to his attention, by snapping about it in his hearing.

The only help for the situation is to grow more mature in your own right. Take the heat off Ned, accept him "as is," stop highlighting his defects, and adroitly train Junior in more responsible habits. Hire a handyman to do the work that Ned won't, run your own errands and get out more socially, to relax the fixated-fret about domestic trivia that is driving Ned from you.

Your Questions On Homemaking

I have a gold thread mesh cocktail hat which I bought a month or so ago. It is already showing signs of tarnish. As it was rather expensive and because I love it I should like to keep it bright and shining for at least another season. What can I do to keep it from tarnishing any more? If, as I have been told, keeping it wrapped in black paper is the only preventive, where in this town can I find black paper? L. W. B.

Wrapping your hat in the cloth which is chemically treated to prevent tarnishing of silverware might prevent further tarnishing. Such treated cloths can be purchased where silver polish is sold in the housewares section of department stores. Black tissue paper seems to be hard to find just now, but black crepe paper used for decorating purposes is available where such materials are usually sold and could be used to wrap your hat.

THE WORLD OVER

I have a small antique cherry table with an oil finish which is very dull and dingy-looking. I prefer a rubbed-down shellac finish to bring out the beauty of the wood. Please tell me how to remove the oil (or oil and wax) finish and put on a shellac finish. J. B. R.

Go over the table with varnish remover to remove the old finish. When finish is removed, wipe with benzine. Now, when dry, sand the surface until satin smooth. Wipe away dust with a soft cloth. Apply shellac thinned with an equal quantity of denatured alcohol with a brush or cloth. Four or five coats are applied, one immediately following the other and allow the piece to stand for 24 hours. The final finish is paste wax. If you wish, you can work a little burnt umber into the wax to darken. Allow wax to dry thoroughly and polish vigorously.

Whom could I contact to appraise the value of an oil print. Where could I sell it if it is a good one? J. B. R.

Look under "Appraisers" in the yellow pages of the telephone directory for a firm which appraises such items. Many of these firms sell as well as appraise.

Can you give me information on laundering printed cretonne slip covers successfully? How about starching and ironing them? Is there any way of keeping the colors from fading when laundering? A. B.

To launder printed slip covers, wash in luke warm water with a mild soap. When thoroughly washed, rinsed, and wrung out, starch lightly to restore the crispness. Make starch by mixing ½ cup dry starch with ½ cup cold water. Stir to a smooth paste and add 2 quarts of boiling water gradually, stirring constantly. Cook 3 to 5 minutes until the mixture becomes clear. Now to this, add about 5 quarts of cold water. Dip the covers into the starch solution, squeezing starch through them. Wring and hang indoors or in shade to dry to prevent fading. When thoroughly dry, sprinkle and roll up. Leave overnight, if possible, to distribute the moisture evenly. Iron with a hot iron, pulling the seams as you do, to stretch into shape.

The paper in our living room has been painted with water paint. What steps will be necessary before another layer of paper can be applied or an oil base paint? M. C. H.

To be sure that the new wallpaper will stick permanently, it will be necessary to remove the paint and the old wallpaper. This can be done by spraying warm water onto the wall with a garden spray. Allow to stand until it soaks and remove with a broad knife. Stubborn spots may need to be sprayed and allowed to soak several times. If a good grade of water-mixed paint is on the wall, this can serve as the base coat. Apply the oil paint directly over it.

How shall I remove a lipstick mark from a pure silk christening coat. What is the best method to use in storing same for the next generation? L. S.

Before storing, the christening coat should be well cleaned by a reliable cleaner. I would suggest you point out the lipstick spot to him before cleaning so that he can remove it. To store, wrap in many folds of paper. If possible, arrange the coat so that there is a layer of paper between every fold of the silk. Place in a box with a tight fitting cover and store in a dry storage space.

He Protects The Forgetful

The Washington Post
HAROLD BROWN,
a Washington Post carrier boy, commended many times by his customers on upper Connecticut ave. When in the early morning he finds a key forgotten in an apartment door, he takes it from the lock and carefully inserts it in the morning paper

Carrier Helps Customers Who Forget

Harold Brown, 15-year-old carrier for The Washington Post, is a great help to his forgetful customers.

One of these, Mrs. M. L. Evans, of 2800 Connecticut ave. nw., recently told The Post of a particularly helpful act which Harold had performed for her, and one which she feels entitles him to a nomination as The Washington Post's most courteous carrier.

Absent mindedly, Mrs. Evans had left the key in the door of her apartment. When he came to deliver the newspaper, Brown found it, and slipped it inside her newspaper.

The winner among The Washington Post's 1200 carriers will be selected on the basis of readers' citations, and will receive a $50 Government bond. The contest closes at midnight March 18.

If you would like to enter your carrier in this contest for special mention, write your name and address on the coupon below. Then add a sentence or two about your carrier, describing what special act of courtesy or service on his part prompts you to nominate him. You do not need to know the carrier's name. He can be identified from your address, so be sure to print it clearly and completely.

Then mail or bring the filled-out coupon to The Washington Post, 1337 E st. nw., Washington 4, D. C.

Measure Aiding Cities Now Ready For Tuck to Sign

Richmond, Va., March 8 (SpD.)—The Hillard road bill to pro-rate increases in the State highway fund to cities today passed the House of Delegates.

Now onlyy the governor's signature to the bill is needed to virtually assure Virginia cities of a larger road allotment than the present $4000 a mile for extension of primary highway systems.

At the same time, the Baldwin $300-a-mile bill for further highway aid to localities remained in a House subcommittee, apparent victim of feuding between city and rural delegates, largely over annexation measures.

Roberts to Fight

Delegate Ernest Robertson of Roanoke County, chairman of the subcommittee and proponent of several anti-annexation bills, declared he would fight the Baldwin bill "to the last ditch."

Other General Assembly actions:

1. The House passed, 66 to 11, the Fenwick Senate bill to increase from 14 to 16 years the age limit for the employment of children, with some exceptions.

2. The Senate passed, 21 to 10, the Crockett House bill placing the State hunting license at $3.50, State fishing license at $3 and abolishing the combination State hunting and fishing tag. It adopted an amendment, which must be concurred in by the House, restoring the combination county hunting and fishing license at $1.

3. The House passed the Hagood Senate bills providing sanitary inspection and regulations for trailer camps, tourist camps, roadside restaurants and filling stations.

Vehicle Weight Bill Passed

4. The Senate passed the Irvine-Bailey-Dejarnette bill giving the Highway Commission authority to regulate the weight of vehicles on State highways. It permits loads up to 40,000 pounds for vehicles with three axles and 50,000 pounds maximum for vehicles with four axles, but not more than 18,000 pounds per axle.

The Hillard bill provides that cities shall receive $4000 per mile for extensions of the primary highway system in cities, as at present. However, should the highway fund increase, the cities' allotments would increase by the same percentage.

The Baldwin bill would provide $300-a-mile for streets not a part of the primary system in cities and towns of 3500 or more population. The streets would have to be of specified widths and maintained at a satisfactory standard.

Funds from the increased hunting and fishing licenses would go for restocking of fish and game, as recommended by the Crockett commission. Receipts from Hunting and fishing would be kept separate for separate purposes.

The Senate Courts of Justice Committee trimmed Governor Tuck's reorganization program by about one-third and reported it out for Senate action, probably tomorrow. The program, as cleared by the committee, would reduce State departments and agencies to 27 from the present 70, instead of the Governor's proposed reduction to 17.

Rejected largely because of the controversial nature of reorganization plans were proposals to change the set-up of the Industrial Commission, Department of Labor and Industry and the Unemployment Compensation Commission, State Milk Commission, Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries and the Commission of (Coastal) Fisheries.

Board Warns Extra-Wet Va. Restaurants

Virginia restaurants selling more beer and wine than food face possible loss of their beverage licenses, the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board warned yesterday.

Board Secretary John P. McLaughlin said the drive will be aimed to rid the State of places that, while operating as restaurants, "have deteriorated into grog shops."

All ABC field inspectors have been ordered to report such restaurants, he stated, and added that questionable cases will be heard by the board before new licenses are issued July 1.

He explained only restaurants with on-premises licenses will be affected, not private clubs.

"It has always been the board's policy that the sale of alcoholic beverage is incidental to other business at an establishment," McLaughlin said.

In cases where a beer parlor is acceptable to a community, however, some exceptions may be made, McLaughlin stated.

ABC Inspector W. W. Duncan, jr., in Alexandria, reported he has 511 establishments to check in the Alexandria-Fairfax-Prince William area. Thirty-three restaurants with on-premises licenses are on Alexandria's King st. alone, he said.

Only 4 of 689 Shop Elections Lost by Unions

By The Associated Press

Unions won 685 and lost four of the 689 union shop elections held in the first four months under the Taft-Hartley law.

The score was announced Sunday by the National Labor Relations Board. It summed up the cases handled between August 22, when the provisions of the act in which it is concerned became effective, and last December 31. Similar reports will be made every three months from now on.

Unions had something to think about in another statistical item. More workers voted for no union at all in collective bargaining elections in the four-month period than voted for any of the union groups. There were 55,414 votes counted on the balloting, and 16,179 were cast for no union at all. AFL unions polled 15,852 votes; CIO unions received 10,989, and independent unions, 12,294.

The Friendship Train on Film

By Richard L. Coe

THE CROWDED CRYSTAL BALL: The Warner has something novel Saturday night, the 20th . . . The theater's being taken over for premiere showings of "Thanks America" and "Friendship Train" under auspices of the National Friendship Train Committee . . . The first is the short film Drew Pearson spoke of at the recent Variety Club luncheon; it was produced by leading Italian movie people to show their appreciation for the gifts from America via Pearson's Friendship Train . . . The latter is a documentary produced by Warner Brothers and the charity drive's national chairman, Harry M. Warner . . . Saturday night's hour and a half program will go on at 8:30 before an invited audience . . . After the films are shown the theater will go back to its regular schedule, including its midnight showing.

THE NEW DUPONT Theater will have a gala benefit opening on Thursday night, the 18th, to aid the Crippled Children's Society . . . The picture, aptly enough, is "The Roosevelt Story," a unique collection of Rooseveltiana gathered through the years of his public life . . . There'll be a preview of the picture for the town's theater folk earlier in the day . . . The next day the new house enters its regular role as the Capital's latest first-run picture theater . . . "The Roosevelt Story," by the way, will be shown later at the Booker T., the week of April 1.

THE TWENTIETH Annual One-Act Play Tournament begins a week from tonight at Roosevelt High. . . . Preliminary judges will be Mrs. Caroline McKinley Ashbrook, Percy Baneskek and Hugh S. Smith; judges for the finals will be the town's four drama critics. . . . That first night will offer the St. Paul's Players in "Fumed Oak," the Little Theater of Alexandria in "Dock Strike" and the Falls Church Community Theater in "Ways and Means." . . . Thursday, March 18, brings the Foundry Church Theater in "The Purple Doorknob," the FBI Identification Group in "Smokescreen" and the Arts Club in "Thursday Evening" (good booking!). . . . Saturday, the 20th, the Southeast Dramatics Association offers "The Kite," the Montgomery Players "The Pipes of Dunbar" and the Arlington Little Theater "Will o' the Wisp." . . . Winners of the preliminaries compete in the finals Tuesday, the 23d. . . . Seats now at the Fairway, 1328 G st.

WITH FAYE EMERSON and Louis Calhern in the leading roles, "The Play's the Thing" will open a two-week run at the National Monday, April 12, which gives the theater a full schedule through April 23 ("An Inspector Calls" takes the two weeks following the Spike Jones fortnight). . . . The revival of the Ferenc Molnar comedy went into rehearsal in New York yesterday under the triple banner of Gilbert Miller, James Russo and Michael Ellis (the last two were represented earlier in this season with the ill-fated revival of Strindberg's "Dance of Death." . . . It was Gilbert Miller who first presented the late Holbrook Blinn in the play at his father's handsome theater, the Henry Miller, 22 years ago.

STAGE DOOR CANTEEN is plotting a reunion, its first since the Belasco closing, Easter Sunday, March 28, at the Shoreham at 9 p. m. . . . The get-together will be simultaneous with the annual supper at New York's Waldorf at which the Antoinette Perry awards will be announced . . . Miss Perry, who directed all of Brock Pemberton's hits, including the indefatigable "Harvey," was as active in the Theater Wing and Stage Door Canteens as she was at directing . . . That night at the Shoreham's new banquet room, there'll be supper and dancing for alumni of the wartime service cafe . . . For information and reservations call DUpont 0381 between 10 a. m. and 6 p. m.

PRODUCTIONS, INC., the drama group of the King-Smith School, has been affected by the New York success of the New Stages' Sartre play, "The Respectful Prostitute." . . . This was to have been on the local schedule, but New Stages holds the rights . . . Which means the group's next will be "Hedda Gabler," the Ibsen play which served Eva Le Gallienne poorly in New York a few weeks ago . . . In the drama, opening a three-week run Tuesday, March 23, will be Beatrice Newport, Barbara Joyce, Patricia Coates, Paul Ballentyne, Leo Luckier, Russell Foster and Clara Thomas . . . Reservations at ADams 0140.

TODAY: Meeting of the Motion Picture Council of the District of Columbia this morning at 11 at the YWCA . . . Ruth Draper in an evening of her monosketches tonight at 8:30 in Andrew Rankin Chapel of Howard University . . . Howard University Players open a four-night run of Elmer Rice's "The Adding Machine" in Spaulding Hall on the campus at 8:30 . . . Three glittering ladies of the operatic world—Licia Albanese, Stella Roman and Rise Stevens—volunteer their soprano eclat for the American Friends for Italian Aid concert tonight at 8:30 in Constitution Hall; Robert Merrill, Kurt Baum and Salvatore Baccaloni, mere men, also are on the star-studded program.

Coroner's Jury Holds Garners

A coroner's jury yesterday found Lawrence J. and George A. Garner responsible for shooting and killing two cab drivers late last month after admittedly robbing them of small sums of money.

The brothers were held for the grand jury. Detective Lieut. Edgar E. Ccott testified Lawrence had told him his revolver was fired accidentally in both cases.

Hrs. Mary Hardy and Mrs. Lannie Jones, widows of the taxi drivers, James Hardy and Howard Jones, were among the 40 spectators at the inquest.

Lawrence Garner, 23, of 2131 L st. nw., and George, 25, of 28½ Hanover st. nw., took a calm interest in the proceedings and showed no marked emotion at the verdict.

According to Scott's testimony, the brothers admitted robbing the hackers on February 27 of about $4 each, and both said Lawrence had beaten the cab drivers with a bottle and wielded the death weapon in both cases.

Scott testified George Garner admitted hearing the shots on both occasions, but said he did not know the cab drivers had been killed until he read it in the paper the next day.

Parents Report That "Sit-uation" Is Well in Hand

Six local couples have formed themselves into a cooperative baby-sitting society which very neatly solves their problems without costing anybody any money.

While their idea may not be brand new, I think it's worth passing along for the benefit of other parents who might like to try it.

Here's the way it works: The six families choose a chairman, who serves for a month and then passes his job along to the others in turn. The chairman runs the show and "keeps books" for all six.

Anybody who wants a baby sitter tells the chairman, who makes the assignment. The sitter gets credit for "plus" hours and the family which employs these services is charged with "minus" hours. Double time is assessed for hours after midnight.

The family with the greatest "minus" balance is given the first sitting assignment that comes along. In that way those who require sitters most often must themselves do the most sitting for their neighbors.

The six couples who use this system are Mr. and Mrs. Pat Harness, 5053 S. 22d st.; Mr. and Mrs. George Griesbauer, 5047 S. 25th st.; Capt. and Mrs. Lee Ruggles, 5041 S. 22d st.; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Larsen, 2221 S. Dinwiddie st.; Mr. and Mrs. Marc Ostinato, 2300 S. Dinwiddie st., and Mr. and Mrs. Greg Norris, 4800 S. 25th st., all of Arlington, Va.

BOWLING BAWL

William Morton of 1233 Newton st. ne. cries out that the operators of local duckpin alleys "still don't know the war is over." Bill says:

"There's such a shortage of alleys that competition among them has disappeared. As a result, the operators have conveniently forgotten about the services which are usually furnished to bowling patrons.

"We do without chalk, towels, water bowls (for those with dry hands) and even soap and towels in the washrooms. We come home with dirty hands and catch youknowwhat from the little woman when she finds our fingerprints all over the house.

"How about giving the bowlers a break and voicing a plea in their behalf?"

Okay. But here's a little advice for you, from an old hand at the game.

When you go bowling, take the little woman along. She'll get her hands dirty, too, and won't be able to bawl you out.

MORE ABOUT COURTESY

The Board of Trade's courtesy campaign has moved another District Liner to complain about the lack of courtesy shown by some Capital Transit employes. Madeline Bullard of 1841 Columbia rd. nw. writes:

"On many occasions I've had the door of a streetcar deliberately closed in my face—and not because the car was full, either.

"Then I'd try to get on the car behind, for there are usually several of the same number in a group. [Ah, how well I know that. Madeline. They run in bunches, like bananas.]

"But by the time one gets back to the second car, the light has changed and the whole string of them move off like a train."

Gentlemen of Capital Transit, the lady makes a good point.

I think that if I were the operator of a half-empty car following immediately behind a full car, I'd pull up and pause a moment to give the customers a chance to get on.

TREASURER'S REPORT

The envelopes containing streetcar tokens for Children's Hospital continue to turn up some wonderful human-interest stories.

An anonymous donor from 2800 Woodley rd. nw. sends in one token and this note:

"This one has been to the Marshalls, the Marianas and the Carolines. I got a ride home, and didn't need it after all."

Here's another example of how the collection goes. When I slammed reckless bus drivers recently, Operator Irwin Abell of 2505 Q st. se., slammed right back at reckless motorists in general.

But the next day (before his letter appeared here) I got a second letter which said:

"Sorry, I don't have any tokens for the kids. Give them this 10 bucks."

Thanks, Irwin. And thanks, also, to the anonymous contributor who also sent in $10 and wrote, "It's a privilege to support such a worthy institution as Children's Hospital."

Additional tokens have also been received from:

M. R. Beasley, 4431 Albemarle st. nw.; Eleanor Busick, McLean, Va.; L. Rose, 2527 14th st. ne.; Instrument Associates, 812 17th st. nw.; Maude C. Cahill, Pat M. Murphy, 1648 Newton st. nw.; Mrs. J. O. Frenzel, 3000 Vista st. ne., and Robert H. Sauter, 3901 Connecticut ave. nw.

HOLLYWOOD — Toots Shor, whose New York restaurant has become the capital of baseball, was at the Beverly Hills Hotel pool, reporting on his night's visit with Gene Fowler. "First he sent me a big flower, for my lapel," said Shor . . . "What kind of flower?" he was asked . . . Shor said, "It was a . . . er . . . ," then he turned to his baseball-wise wife, and asked: "Baby, what's the name of that first baseman the Dodgers used a few seasons ago?" "Dolph Camilli," said Mrs. Shor. "That's it," said Toots Shor, "Fowler sent me a camellia."

Sam Woods, the United States Consul General to Munich, who married Wilhelmina Busch in Bavaria a few days ago, met the St. Louis brewery heiress when he was stationed in Zurich. Miss Busch, who was then married to a young German doctor, left Germany near the end of the war. Her American funds were frozen. She purged herself from the blacklist by returning to Germany in behalf of our Government and checking on the published reports of a mysterious earthquake in Bavaria. The description of the fire and smoke following the quake indicated that the Nazis might have been testing an atomic bomb. Miss Busch brought proof that it was merely an earthquake. She brought it to Sam Woods, and that's how their romance began.

Green on Mars Taken as Sign Of Plant Life

Austin, Tex., March 8 (AP).—McDonald observatory astronomers have discovered a new satellite to the planet Uranus.

At the same time, they announced the green areas of Mars may be low order plants such as mosses or lichens.

"The question of animal life is unsettled but it is extremely improbable that highly developed animals could exist in the rigorous climate of Mars in the absence of a detectable amount of oxygen," said Dr. Gerard P. Kuiper, director of the observatory.

Dr. Kuiper said the conclusion was that high order plants, such as those which produce seeds, and the ferns, do not exist on Mars.

These studies were aided by use of a newly-developed infra-red spectrometer.

A special study was made of the transparency of the Mars atmosphere to violet and ultraviolet light.

"The observations confirmed photographs taken many years ago in California," Dr. Kuiper said. "The explanation proposed is that the Mars' atmosphere is always filled with an icy haze in which denser clouds form at night, or even before sunset. Even these clouds are transparent to red light."

NEW Scientific Discoveries Used in Hair Experts' Exclusive Treatments Help You To GROW THICKER HAIR
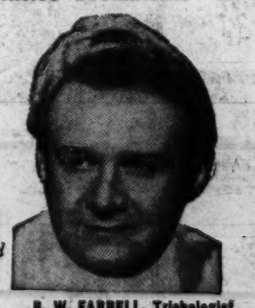
Hopeless Cases Not Accepted


R. W. FARRELL, Trichologist
Hair Experts' Scientific Plan Allied with Nature's Functions!
Upon Nature's innate system of growth is based Hair Experts' specialized system . . . a plan that results in thicker hair NATURALLY grown and nurtured to full strength and virility with the aid of modern scientific formulae. First, the scalp is thoroughly and professionally cleansed of its dandruff or other disorders through special, gentle but effective germicides which penetrate below the skin surface to kill the source of the infection and then reopen clogged passages.
Then when the basic cause of the scalp trouble is routed. Hair Experts begin the rejuvenating treatments that start to show actual results within weeks.
Special Exclusive Laboratory Created Formulae Used ONLY by Hair Experts!
After energizing the papilla to action, and then creating a fertile "field" for that growth, Hair Experts' special formulae (scientifically created by and for them) stimulate the sub-scalp hair growth to normal, natural length, strength and thickness. Then sluggish blood circulation is normalized to flood the hair follicles with life-giving "food" for hair growth.
Delay Is Deadly! Fatal Follicle Shrinkage May Negate Any Treatments!
Once your hair begins to show these symptoms: excessive hair in the combings; weak, short hair; excessive dandruff; itchiness, etc., you can be sure that a scalp disorder is already well under way. Follicle shrinkage is fatal!
Once it has set in your chance for thicker hair is practically negligible! Come in IMMEDIATELY for a free, private scalp examination. Relax under our pleasant, professional treatments and care, and enjoy THICKER HAIR within a few months.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Tax Plan Aimed at Speculators

By Drew Pearson

A highly confidential memorandum on proposed changes in the tax laws contains some bad news for commodity speculators who have been raking in millions in profits. Dictatorial Ways and Means Chairman Harold Knutson considered the memo so secret and explosive that he refused at first to show it even to members of his committee, fearing leaks to the press.

Knutson

The memo was prepared by the Internal Revenue Bureau and recommends 49 specific changes in tax statutes, including a sweeping revision of capital gains assessments. This would prevent the Ed Pauleys from declaring in their income returns "any gain or loss attributable to fluctuations in the market price of securities and commodities" resulting from so-called long and short selling.

To discourage speculating, the law now requires speculators to pay a tax on their full profits provided they dispose of securities or commodities within six months—short term—of purchase. If, on the other hand, they dispose of securities and commodities held longer than six months—long term—they pay a tax on only 50 per cent of their profits. Therefore many speculators convert their short-term gains into long-term merely by telling their brokers to defer payment on sales until after the six-month deadline, thus greatly reducing their taxes. Also many, with broker connivance, only declare losses in the six-month period, but keep their profitable accounts operative for longer than six months, thereby cutting taxes in half.

In other words, the present capital-gains-tax law tends to make the United States a nation of speculators and tax sharpshooters.

Other Proposals

These tax-evasion practices have been hotly denounced by Secretary of Agriculture Clinton Anderson, and the Internal Revenue Bureau now urges that they be changed.

Other changes recommended by the bureau include:

1. Making employers who delay payment of withholding taxes from employes subject to a "civil penalty." Some employers make a habit of using withholding taxes to defray business expenses instead of turning them over immediately to the Treasury.

2. Authorizing the Federal Government to withhold wages from Federal employes who are delinquent in income taxes.

3. Elimination of the long-established practice of allowing deductions for work clothes, except specialized clothing for particular occupations.

4. A sweeping revision of the current method of computing the taxable income of life insurance companies "to more equitably reflect" their profits.

5. A revision of the law dealing with recovered war losses in order to make the tax on United States property in enemy countries recovered after the war, equal to the deduction claimed by the owner when he lost the property on December 7, 1941.

6. That corporations be permitted to prorate a heavy loss five years forward and one year back, instead of using the present method of a two-year "carryback" and a two-year "carryover." Thus a company could spread a heavy loss over a period of six years.

7. That Congress "explore the question" of decreasing taxes on small business corporations with incomes below $50,000, which now must pay a 53 per cent tax on income exceeding $25,000, and up to $50,000 compared with 38 per cent tax assessed on corporations with incomes over $50,000. The Bureau of Internal Revenue feels that the 53 per cent tax on income between $25,000 and $50,000 is too high. It will be interesting to see what Congress does about these carefully prepared proposals for tax revision.

Inside Knowledge

One way by which the little group of speculators around Senator Thomas of Oklahoma made money was by getting some influential person to make a statement calculated to affect the commodity market, then, knowing in advance that this statement was coming, they would play the market accordingly. That's why Senator Thomas' own statements on the Senate floor, certain to affect the market at the same time he was speculating, were so important.

How the system worked is shown by the following telephone conversation between Ralph Moore, speculating buddy of Senator Thomas, and J. T. Sanders, legal counsel of the National Grange.

Moore—"The market's in a hell of a shape."

Sanders—"It is bad, isn't it?"

Moore—"What are you people going to do about it?"

Sanders—"What can we do?"

Moore—"Well, the Grange can issue a statement of some kind to help steady the market. There's no reason why prices should go down like this. It's a disgrace the way farmers are being robbed."

Sanders—"Maybe you're talking about brokers. The farmers have sold most of their wheat. They aren't being hurt like some others I could mention."

Moore—"You ought to get out a statement before prices go any lower. You people represent the farmers, don't you?"

Sanders—"You bet we represent the farmers. Who are you trying to represent—the farmers or Ralph Moore?"

The Grange official didn't get the answer to this hot dig. Angrily, Moore hung up.

When we differ

I know that there are times
In life . . . When we do not agree . . . And yet I honestly believe . . . That you were meant for me . . . You nourish your opinions and . . . Of course
I have my own . . . And both of us are more than prompt . . .
To make our feelings known . . . But, darling, after all we are . . . Entitled to our say
. . . And every thought may help us both . . . To live a better day . . . As long as we are not inclined . . . To argue and get mad . . . And shout a lot of foolish words . . . We wish we never had . . . So never let it worry you . . . When we do not agree . . . Because it only magnifies . . . How much you mean to me.
